Anti-Japanese students

Rampaging students overturn a Japanese-made car in downtown Jakarta, Indonesia, Tuesday during a wave of anti-Japanese demonstrations touched off by the visit of Japan's Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka. Jakarta is the last stop on Tanaka's 15-day goodwill tour of Southeast Asia. He has encountered demonstrations in several places during his trip, but the Jakarta protests were by far the biggest and most disruptive. Troops were called out to contain the demonstrators, who denounced the Japanese as "economic imperialists." (UPI)

Deficit budget is presented by Bond

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Gov. Christopher S. Bond presented a $2.1 billion budget to the Missouri Legislature today which he said was "people-oriented."

He urged the lawmakers not to enact any new costly programs that would lead to tax hikes.

The recommendations for 1974-75 anticipate a $17.5 million deficit. "This is the second consecutive year of deficits," Bond said in his budget message. He said the deficit for the current fiscal year is estimated at more than $15 million because appropriations outstripped revenues.

He said the programs which caused this year's deficit are: tax relief for the elderly, Aid to Dependent Children, special education and the school foundation program.

Bond said the state faces an "increasingly tight and uncertain fiscal situation." He said he trimmed agency requests for the next fiscal year by more than $108 million.

"If we are judicious in the allocation of our resoures, if the economy does not turn down severely, and if you do not enact any major new spending programs from general revenue, we can continue to meet our most essential obligations within our existing tax structure," Bond said.

The Governor's budget includes one costly new program, to provide health care for high-risk mothers and infants prone to mental retardation. It would cost $5 million, but Bond said:

"The cost of maintaining one individual for life in one of our mental retardation institutions exceeds $500,000. This program would more than pay for itself if we prevent retardation in only ten people."

He said it was the only major new spending program he is recommending and urged it be passed because "it is one with such great promise for human improvement, as well as long-run economic benefit."

The proposed budget recommends increased spending in the following areas: corrections, health, mental health, and education. It calls for a 5 per cent salary increase for state employes and merit increases for deserving personnel.

Besides the new maternal and child health care program, the health and mental health budgets call for increased general revenue spending of $10 million and capital improvements of $9.5 million. Six new positions are requested in the Division of Health for emergency medical services. Also asked for—15 new cottages for patients at the Marshall State School and Hospital and 10 at the St. Louis State School and Hospital.

The education budget calls for $381.8 million for the school foundation program, an increase of $21.7 million over the current year. Of the increase $6.7 million would finance special education programs for the handicapped. Vocational education would get $4 million more in the next fiscal year, including support for seven new area schools—Reeds Spring, West Plains, St. Louis, Mountain Grove, Arcadia Valley, Boonville and Raytown.

The state will have available $67.6 million in federal revenue sharing funds in the next fiscal year, Bond said. He proposed that $55.7 million of it be used for capital improvements, $5 million for the new maternal and child care mental retardation program, and $3 million for sewer and water grants.

Bond said the total capital improvements program amounts to $64.8 million and includes these additional projects:

—Building three new schools for the retarded at Sikeston-Charleston, Hannibal and Union, plus plans for a fourth at Springfield.

—Expansion of and improvements to parks and conservation areas.

—Construction of a new consolidated laboratory to serve several state agencies in Jefferson City.

—New administration buildings of $2 million at the University of Missouri-St. Louis and $1.8 million at Northeast State University. Also a $2.2 million general services building at UMSL.

—A new $6 million veterinary medical complex at the University of Missouri-Columbia.

—Support of $6.2 million for a conservatory and performing arts center at the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

—A new $2.7 million industrial education building at Southwest Missouri State University.

Gasoline austerity, fuel oil rationing program in effect

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government began applying today a program of gasoline austerity and fuel oil rationing, including less home heating for the nation.

While no ration stamps are involved, Federal Energy Office officials have described the petroleum allocation system as non-coupon rationing for all major products except retail gasoline.

The new regulations, which took effect one minute before midnight Monday, permit exceptions for hardship cases.

Normally, however, thermostats in homes and other residential buildings must be set six degrees lower than in the same month of 1972, and in other buildings ten degrees lower. Many people have already done this and the regulations will not require a further reduction on their part.

Service stations will get less gasoline than before. Just how much less was uncertain, but an FEO official guessed it might be 15 to 20 per cent less than the public otherwise would use in 1974.

The administration has asked motorists to limit themselves voluntarily to ten gallons of gasoline per week, but so far there is no formal limit to their individual gasoline use.

Airlines will get five per cent less aviation fuel than in 1972 and they have already started reducing flight schedules.

Electric power plants are to get as much residual fuel oil as the FEO says they can have, depending how much there is.

But essential services and military activities will get just about all the petroleum they need, holding top priorities in the new nationwide petroleum allocation system.

In allowing for "hardship" exceptions to their specific limits, the regulations provide plenty of room for deciding what a hardship is — apparently it could include an exceptionally cold house or a business that's hurting from too little fuel.

"Hardship", the regulations say, "means a situation involving or potentially involving substantial discomfort or danger and-or economic dislocation."

In effect, the system rations major petroleum products right down to the final consumer, with one major exception: gasoline.

The Nixon administration has ordered creation of a standby gasoline-rationing system but has not yet decided whether to use it.

As when they were first proposed the final regulations, which took effect just before midnight, were accompanied by a flip-flop of FEO interpretation.

Late Monday, FEO spokesmen said — mistakenly, as it developed — that service stations would be allocated as much gasoline as in 1972.

Still later, however, the agency reversed itself and assistant director John Hill said service stations would get whatever was left after higher-priority bulk purchasers were supplied, just as proposed earlier.

Hill said the flip-flop in explanations made little real difference since most gasoline goes to service stations anyway and the priority demands "off the top" would make little impact.

More significant was the regulation to tip refinery outputs a little away from gasoline and toward other products.

Senate amends bill on state speed limit

BULLETIN

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri Senate today approved a bill allowing the legislature to lower the state speed limit to 55 miles an hour as a fuel saving measure.

The House has approved a bill giving the governor the authority to lower the speed limit in line with whatever speed limit is set by federal law.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A House-approved bill to lower the state speed limit to 55 miles per hour was amended today in the Senate to give the legislature power to change the speed limit instead of the governor.

Sen. William Cason, D-Clinton, offered the amendment, which was approved by a voice vote.

"This restores legislative control of the situation," Cason said.

The governor has indicated he had no preference as to who has authority to set the speed limit during the energy crisis. The limit now is 70 m. p. h.

Sen. Raymond Howard, D-St. Louis, succeeded in knocking out an amendment to prevent public school buses from being used to cross district boundaries to achieve integration. The parliamentary committee ruled the amendment, wanted by Sen. Earl Blackwell, D-Hillsboro, did not apply to the bill's subject matter, which was to reduce speed.

The Missouri House gave tentative approval Monday to a bill giving the state Public Service Commission authority to monitor all oil, gasoline and fuel supplies in the state.

Rep. Robert Snyder, R-Kirkwood, the Republican floor leader, successfully amended the measure to change the governing agency to the PSC from a five-member energy commission as approved by a committee.

In today's action, the House and Senate will receive this afternoon a report from the governor on his proposed $2.1 billion 1974-75 fiscal budget.

The fuel bill, approved 105-51 Monday night, would allow the PSC to subpoena records of all retailers—including service stations—oil distributors, gasoline distributors, wholesalers and coal suppliers.

Suez withdrawal plan 'constructive'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger today outlined Egypt's counterproposals for a withdrawal of military forces on the Suez front and said Israeli leaders appeared to find "constructive aspects" in the plan.

Kissinger emerged from a two-hour meeting with Deputy Premier Yigal Allon, Foreign Minister Abba Eban and Defense Minister Moshe Dayan and said they had "a very warm and I think very useful discussion."

"We learned in very great detail what the Egyptian ideas are," said Eban. He added that the talk had been "very useful, detailed and substantive."

The foreign minister went from the meeting to Premier Golda Meir's home to tell her about it. Mrs. Meir is confined to her home with an attack of shingles.

The chief point under discussion is what Egypt is willing to do in the way of thinning its forces and arms on the east bank of the Suez Canal in exchange for withdrawal of Israeli troops from the canal.

Kissinger brought the Egyptian counterproposals Monday night from Aswan, where he conferred once more with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. The American said he believed they had "narrowed the differences substantially" and he hoped to narrow them further during his talks with the Israelis.

Egypt apparently had no objections to Israel's offer to pull its troops back to a line about 20 miles east of the canal. But Kissinger returned to Israel with a map showing the positions the Egyptians insist on holding on the east bank as well as the buffer zone the Egyptians are willing to let the United Nations peace-keeping force man between the two armies.

One high-ranking American official with Kissinger said he thought the differences between the Israeli proposal and the Egyptian counterproposal were manageable.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said shortly before Kissinger's return that the Soviet Union has rebuilt most of the missile sites in Egypt and Syria that were destroyed in the October war and has introduced new and longer-range missiles into the armories of both nations.

Mental examination for Phillips approved

(Democrat-Capital Service)

COLUMBIA — Kim Eugene Phillips, 21, the accused murderer of Mrs. Karen Jones, 16, will undergo a mental examination at the State Hospital at Fulton, Prosecuting Attorney Gary Fleming said Tuesday.

The motion for the examination was approved here by Boone County Circuit Court Judge John M. Cave Monday afternoon. The case is being heard in Boone County on a change of venue from Pettis County.

Fleming said the results of the examination will play a "major role" in determining whether Phillips is capable of standing trial for second degree murder.

The prosecuting attorney said that since such mental examinations usually take "an average of four to eight weeks," Phillips' Feb. 12 trial date in Circuit Court here has been continued. No new date has been set, he said.

In other action Monday, Judge Cave disqualified himself from the case after a motion had been filed by Adam Fischer, Phillips' attorney. Fleming said the case will be heard by Boone County (Division Two) Circuit Court Judge Frank Conley.

Fleming said Fischer's motion sought to disqualify Judge Cave due to "bias and prejudice." Fleming said such motions are not uncommon in cases where a judge has previously ruled on the admissibility of evidence.

Judge Cave ruled last month that written and oral statements allegedly obtained from Phillips can be used in court.

Fleming said Phillips will probably be taken to Fulton this week.

Phillips, a former airman at Whiteman AFB, is charged with the Aug. 13 strangulation death of Mrs. Jones at her apartment at 1218 East Fifth. He was arrested Aug. 16.

Repeated tape erasures alleged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Technical experts reported today that the 18-minute gap in one of the subpoenaed Watergate tapes was caused by "the process of erasing and rerecording at least five, and perhaps as many as nine, separate and contiguous segments."

In a report to U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, the experts said the gap "could not have been produced by any single, continuous operation."

They also said that recovery of any speech that was obliterated "is not possible by any method known to us."

Sirica scheduled a hearing later to hear additional testimony from the experts.

They did not speculate whether the gap was caused by deliberate or accidental actions.

Their report appeared to eliminate the possibility that President Nixon's secretary, Rose Mary Woods, could have inadvertently erased a segment of the tape if she accidentally pushed the record button when interrupted by a telephone call while trying to transcribe the tape of a June 20, 1972 conversation between the President and his aide H. R. Haldeman.

Miss Woods had testified she thought she might have caused at least part of the gap when she pushed that button and possibly inadvertently kept her foot on a foot pedal that operated the machine.

But the experts said their examination showed conclusively that the gap could not have been produced by a single continuous operation. They said whether the foot pedal was used or not "the recording controls must have been operated by hand in the making of each segment."

The tones which formed the buzz "do not appear to be caused by normal machine operations," the experts said.

They also said they believe that conversation had been recorded on the obliterated segment.

Desegregation plan criticized

Black group wants Joplin festival postponed

For the second time in two months, a group of local blacks has criticized the Sedalia School District's desegregation plan.

The group, known as Partners for Progress, also asks that the Scott Joplin Ragtime Festival Committee reconsider plans to hold the festival this summer.

The request was contained in a letter to Chamber of Commerce President Jake Siragusa. Copies of the 5½-page letter were also sent to Superintendent of Schools Dr. Allan Henningsen, the NAACP, Ebony magazine and The Democrat-Capital.

In addressing the Chamber, the group says, "We . . . are certain that under the present circumstances you would not wish to continue at present with your plans for the Scott Joplin Music Festival until crucial steps are taken to eliminate the problems in our educational system."

The letter adds, "As an organization who is seeking to promote a Scott Joplin Music Festival in the coming year, we are certain that you must be concerned with the kind of social climate which presently exists in the setting where this great black musical genius is to be honored for his outstanding musical contributions to the world.

"We, too, are concerned. We are concerned that those who would seek to honor a black hero appear to be insensitive to those social conditions inherent within this community which would tend to make such a grand festival as you are planning appear to be no more than a further attempt to exploit this black genius for the economic advantage of a privileged few."

In comparing Scott Joplin to a black school-age child today, the letter says Joplin would face "obstacles" if he were a "victim of the School District 200's desegregation plan."

The young Joplin, the letter continues, would be relegated to an overcrowded classroom in a school several miles from his home. He would be faced, the letter continues, with a school board and a community that failed to recognize his problems and make any attempt to deal with them constructively, and he would be called derogatory names which would offend his pride and dignity and be punished because he would seek to defend his pride and dignity.

The group presents an 11-point program "to alleviate the most pressing problems of the desegregation plan."

The program includes: restoration of Hubbard School as a public elementary facility; the appointment of a bi-racial committee to make a feasibility study of all school property; the selection of another bi-racial committee to meet monthly to review the handling of all racial incidents at schools; mandatory courses in ethnic awareness at schools; and an all-out effort to integrate the governing boards of the school district to reflect the racial composition of the city.

A black replacement for Smith-Cotton Principal Earl Finley, who is being reassigned, also is proposed by Partners For Progress.

In a letter sent to the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) in November, Partners For Progress critized the desegregation plan on three major points: (1) Hubbard School facilities are not being fully utilized; (2) Busing black chilren may deny them equal opportunity to public education; (3) The plan may have failed to take into consideration racial implications and overtones.

School Board President George Thompson said Tuesday that the school board and the superintendent's office "received no

Oil companies rejected increasing crude production

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials of some of the nation's largest oil companies acknowledge that their industry could have produced more domestic crude oil in recent years but decided against it because it wouldn't have been profitable.

The officials said their companies were only exercising sound business judgments in ignoring such oil, and, to a man, they blamed federal policies and regulations for the situation.

Ten executives from eight of the biggest 10 oil companies made their statements in separate interviews with The Associated Press. Most of the men asked not to be identified either by name or by company.

"The oil we're talking about is in fields that are in secondary and tertiary recovery stages," said one of the officials. "It's very expensive to produce that oil and with the prices we could have gotten for it (under federal price regulation) in past years, we would have lost money.

"To some people, I know that's going to sound evil. But we have a business proposition here. It's hard-headed business economics."

The industry executives were unanimous in blaming federal policies for the lag in domestic oil production. They said price regulation did not allow them sufficient profit to encourage domestic exploration and drilling.

Also cited were the delays in development of the North Slope in Alaska, restrictions on foreign imports and the unavailability of new offshore leases.

"The combination of government policies and the lack of new leases made investment by the oil companies in this country somewhat unattractive," said Norman DeBay, manager of investor relations for the Gulf Oil Corp., the nation's fourth largest oil company.

"The oil companies spent their money overseas where the investment opportunities were good," DeBay said. "I think it's quite a logical thing to have done."

A spokesman for the Federal Energy Office said government officials were aware that there is available domestic oil that the industry has failed to produce.

"Many of the regulation and policy changes made over the past months have been aimed at making production of that oil more attractive to the industry," Gene Curella, the FEO spokesman, said. But he added there was some question whether the industry should have sought those incentives.

"It may make good business sense to the industry to leave that oil in the ground," Curella said. "But is it right to place that high a priority on profits when the nation is in the midst of an energy crisis like we have now?"

Last month, the Cost of Living Council approved a $1 a barrel increase in the price of regulated domestic crude oil, bringing to $5.25 a barrel the price oil companies can charge purchasers.

Both measures were intended to encourage production and development, and oil industry officials indicated the new measures probably would have the desired effect.

"With the prices going up, we're taking another look at the oil it wasn't economical to produce before," one executive said. "The industry undoubtedly will produce that oil when it is financially worthwhile for us to do so."

Frank N. Ikard, president of the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade organization, said the amount of oil recoverable from a petroleum field varies widely depending on specific conditions.

But in many cases, he said, the oil recovery can be increased, often almost doubled, by applying special techniques to maintain the underground pressures that force oil to the surface.

Just how much oil is recovered from any field depends largely on the cost of recovery, compared with prevailing prices, Ikard said.

The relaxation of government oil regulations has been responsible, at least in part, for oil company plans to drastically increase their capital spending for 1974.

State hospital director says budget 'impossible'

By JONATHAN HAUFE
Associated Press Writer

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The director of the Fulton State Mental Hospital says an $11.6 million budget for the hospital recommended by the governor "is impossible to live with," and asked the Senate Appropriations Committee to boost the figure to $13.6 million.

Dr. Donald Peterson said, "we can stand this cut, just like if you cut your throat, you can live with it."

He said inflation has made his budget out of date and said a 5 per cent cost of living pay raise was "sending a boy to do a man's job."

Peterson said $277,000 in emergency appropriations is needed for the hospital to continue operations for the remainder of this fiscal year, expiring June 30.

He noted a 30 per cent increase in raw food costs and costs in allowing persons in the hospital's maximum security unit a hearing to see if they should remain in confinement, as required by a recent court decision.

His budget request is $1.9 million over the current sum, which he said left the hospital "behind before we start out." He said through attrition and low salaries "we're worse in staffed positions than we were four years ago."

The committee also discussed the controversial Missouri Institute of Psychiatry (MIP) and a new plan for its future proposed by Mental Health Director Dr. Harold Robb.

A lack of budget control had led Robb to decide to phase out the MIP at St. Louis by July 1, 1975. But Robb said Monday the MIP should be kept open in some form under Division of Mental Health control.

Under the latest plan Robb outlined, state money appropriated the Division of Mental Health would be channeled through contracts to MIP resident psychiatrists at certain St. Louis private mental hospitals and out-state institutions, such as the Fulton, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Nevada and Columbia mental health centers.

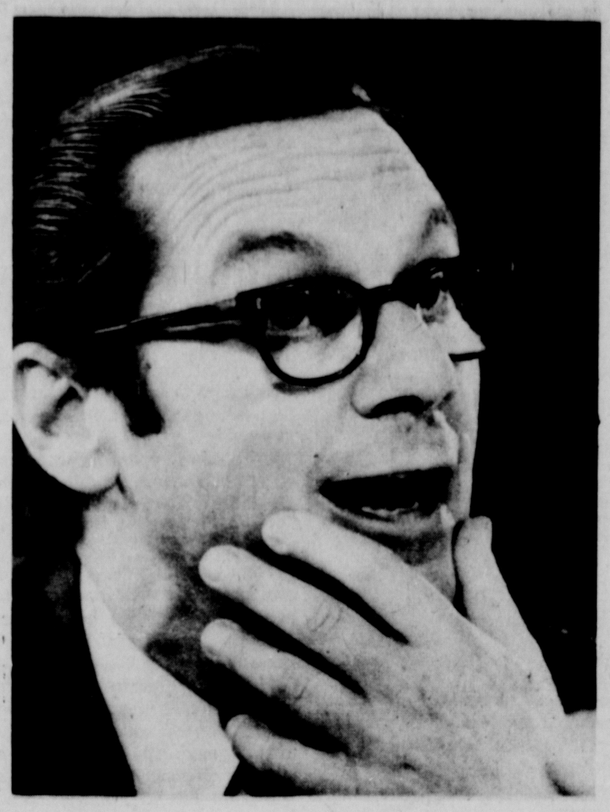

Robb agreed with a $1.2 million budget Gov. Christopher S. Bond recommended for further MIP training programs. The MIP current budget is $1.4 million.

Robb said under his plan mental health officials could screen research projects which could then be judged by the legislators.

Committee Chairman Norman Merrell, D-Monticello, said the state gives psychiatrists a big subsidy by not charging them for MIP training. Robb agreed about $89,000 of state money goes to train a 5-year MIP resident. He did say they served on hospital staffs and took night calls while in training.

Other mental health center directors speaking Monday asked money for increased food, drug, clothing and fuel costs.

Merrell said "we're faced with the same problems. Runaway inflation during a recession. I don't have the answer to either."

Speaking of oil

Federal Energy Chief William E. Simon went to Capitol Hill Monday for the first inquiry into the extent of the oil shortage. Simon told the Joint Congressional Economic subcommittee that the government should be able to require oil companies to reveal much more information on their oil reserves and marketing. (UPI)

Colleges beginning probe into the 26th Amendment

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Colleges and universities have just begun to grapple with the ramifications of the 26th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which made 18-year-olds legally adults, according to officials attending the annual convention of the Association of American Colleges here Monday.

"We are just at the beginning of this issue and not at the end of it," said John Gillis, an executive associate of the AAC. "We're just beginning to investigate it."

According to Gillis, the fact that students under 21 are now considered adults will affect colleges and schools in three areas.

"First is the out-of-state tuition question," he said. "Usually those students pay higher tuition than the in-state students at public colleges and universities for all four years."

But he pointed out that the amendment and subsequent court rulings enable an 18-year-old to qualify for state residence after living there just one year, and consequently a larger number of students will qualify for lower tuition rates thereby affecting the school's revenue.

Then there is the question of student aid, Gillis explained, which in the past has been calculated on a parent's financial statement. He said that if aid now has to be calculated on a students income, "which often is nill, it would upset the whole aid system drastically."

The third area involves rules on dormitory visits, disciplinary regulations and residence hall requirements.

"It's not clear what the impact of this changed student status will be," he explained. "There have been court tests, but they come out in various ways."

Missouri Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton also addressed the more than 1,000 college presidents and deans attending the convention Monday night; and he warned them that unless private schools combine their traditional educational goals with meeting student needs, students will continue to move away toward public universities.

The St. Louis Democrat said students are having a difficult time relating traditional curriculums to their career goals.

Eagleton also called on the educational leaders to continue their efforts to offer quality education despite the skyrocketing costs of operating schools.

"I know that many schools are now taking a new look at their schedules as part of an over-all effort to reduce the expense of higher education, an increasingly important factor in light of the energy crisis," the senator said.

State, local and federal governments could improve the picture for private colleges by increased funding, Eagleton commented, but he warned against any large-scale subsidization under which government might seek to shape the education policies and practices of schools.

'Freestyle' current rage on ski slopes

By ANN BLACKMAN
Associated Press Writer

WATERVILLE VALLEY, N.H. (AP) — "Hot dog," cried Jack Sanders as he took off down the mountain, dancing first on one ski, then the other, turning, jumping, laughing, falling and rolling in the snow like any 6-year-old.

All the slope was a stage. The falling snow seemed to part like a curtain as this frolicking figure in a royal blue snowsuit did one fancy stunt after another.

Sanders, a 38-year-old lawyer from Hampton, N.H., was the star, a student of a new form of skiing that is captivating imaginations of young bombers and older, established types alike.

From the sun-drenched slopes of California's Squaw Valley to the woodland trails winding down the rugged mountains of New England, acrobatics are "in," the biggest thing for skiing since buckle boots.

Some call it "freestyle." To others, it's "hot-dogging." And its disciples are a new breed of skiers, the loose and lively free spirits of the mountains, grooving on everything they were always taught not to do.

"It really blows my mind. I have a helluva time," said Sanders, who was a downhill racer in college. "One weekend of this relaxes me as much as a whole week of skiing used to... It makes skiing a whole new sport."

For years, the ultimate for most skiers was conquering the parallel, whipping down a mountain slope with knees and skis together, leaving a ribbon-like trail behind, kicking up clouds of snow at anyone who got in the way.

Today, however, skiers who have mastered the art of flying down an expert trail with their skis together are getting their kicks by learning to cross one ski over the other, doing splits in the snow, turning in full circles and bounding from one snowbank to another, often collapsing on the backs of their skis in what at first glance looks like a backbreaking fall.

For freestyle skiing is a combination of figure skating, ballet, gymnastics, aerial jumping — and imagination. Rubber bones would help. It's style, not speed that counts. And the maneuvers, with names like Daffy, Otrigger, Helicopter and Space Walk are instant crowd-pleasers.

"Everyone has his own style," said Wayne Wong, a 23-year-old Vancouver, B.C., native of Chinese descent whose stormcloud antics and daring flips have made him America's No. 1 hot-dog hero.

"There are no limits," he said with a puckish grin between freestyle performances at the Washington ski show. "My maximum energy flows in aerial. We don't know what the limits are. The further we go, the more we see can be done."

"It's a revolution in the ski industry," said "Airborne Eddie" Ferguson, 26, who runs freestyle skiing camps at Crystal Mountain in Washington State and at Vail, Colo. "You don't need the perfect technique to have fun."

Flanigan claims incomes exceeded living costs

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — An aide to President Nixon told the American Farm Bureau Federation convention that in 1973 "Americans were economically much better off than ever before."

Peter M. Flanigan, director of the President's Council on International Economic Policy, Monday said "the real income of the United States went up last year."

After his speech, Flanigan told reporters: "Total real output was well above 1972, and so was real personal income." He said gains in real personal income exceeded the rise in the cost of living last year. He also said more new jobs—2.5 million—were created in 1973 than "in any other year in our history."

Flanigan did not give specific figures to back up his contentions about incomes.

He denied a report by the House-Senate Economic Committee that the average American family lost 1 per cent of its purchasing power last year.

He said that increased farm exports had benefitted all citizens.

"They've benefitted from less expensive farm programs," he said. "The balance of payments has been strong. Because of increased agricultural exports, they could import the energy and other goods they needed with a strengthened dollar."

Farm income rose from $20 billion in 1972 to almost $26 billion last year, he said.

"If we can move to an even more open world of trade then we can expand these benefits for us and others and make them permanent," he said.

Flanigan admitted that the wheat sale to the Soviet Union had driven prices up and created "a difficult, excessive burden." But he said restraints on international trade created this problem, not the Nixon Administration's moves toward freer trade.

Fence post impales two

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Police say a suburban Riverside, Mo., woman was killed and a man critically injured when their car crashed into a chain link fence and they were impaled by one of its posts.

Shirley A. Yeager, 26, was dead on arrival Monday at a nearby hospital. The driver, Richard J. Heffron, 30, also of Riverside, was in poor condition early Tuesday at General Hospital.

Police said the Heffron car was starting to pass another vehicle on the Broadway extension, near old Municipal Airport. The Heffron car struck the rear of the second vehicle, then spun into a chain link fence running along the road.

Police said Heffron's car tore up 60 feet of fence before a five-foot section of fence post came through the driver's side window of the car and passed through Heffron's right shoulder and then through Miss Yeager's neck and right shoulder.

Firemen using acetlyene torches worked 30 minutes to free the couple, according to police.

Easy suggestions for keeping fit

Body conscious Americans exercise indoors or out. Photo from Monsanto.

NEW YORK (AP) — Exercise is hardly as time-consuming or unpleasant as its enemies would have you believe, one expert says.

Harvard professor Jean Mayer says this erroneous picture comes when figuring exercise as one unbearably long ordeal, walking 11 and one sixth hours to lose a pound or swimming five and a half hours to lose a pound. In a new Blue Cross booklet, "Food and Fitness," Mayer says weight loss occurs whether activity is performed in a few hours or in a year.

Mayer says that bicycling steadily for seven and a half hours might totally exhaust an average man, but vigorous bicycling for half an hour after dinner each evening would add up to the desired seven and a half hours in just two weeks. In a year, this routine would enable you to shed 26 pounds of body fat.

If this regimen is too much for the exerciser, former astronaut James Lovell, another contributor, has other suggestions to help office workers improve fitness, relieve tension and achieve relaxation.

Lovell suggests raising legs parallel with the floor while sitting. Alternate curling feet back toward the upper torso and pointing toes away from the body. Stretch legs as far as possible when curling.

— When the telephone rings, pull in abdomen and continue normal breathing while you speak.

— When talking on the telephone or reading, put feet on the desk. This will aid circulation by redistributing blood that tends to pool in the legs and feet after prolonged sitting.

— Rotate shoulders backward in a circular, shrugging motion. This will stretch the muscles of the chest that tend to shorten and cause round shoulders, a common posture deficiency, particularly among those who do a lot of typing.

— Roll your head in a circle.

— Stand while reading. Shift weight from one leg to the other and do not slouch.

— Stand up and stretch two or three times a day, perhaps during a coffee break, or lunch.

— Find ways to increase activity while going to and from work. Park the car, or get off the bus, a few blocks from your destination and walk the remainder of the way. Avoid elevator or escalators in going up and down two or three flights of stairs.

Lovell has additional suggestions for a housewife who wants to keep physically fit. He says almost any chore lends itself to some stretching and bending maneuver.

Among helpful hints are picking up items from the floor by planting feet shoulder-width wide and using the right arm to grasp items close to the left foot, and vice versa. This stretches muscles of lower back and thighs.

When standing at a counter to mix batter or cut vegetables, rise up and down on toes, strengthening ankles and calf muscles.

Lift knees high when walking from room to room.

Lovell, who until recently was head of the nation's physical fitness program, urges other exercises and participation in sports. He suggests adopting a regular physical exercise schedule.

Among other articles in the health booklet, which is available free from local Blue Cross plan offices, are discussions on diet, emotional causes of overeating and the revolution in eating habits.

'Dessert and coffee' blossoms again

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

The custom of inviting friends to come early in the evening "for dessert and coffee" instead of for dinner started, as far as we can tell, about 40 years ago in the wake of the depression. Now because of the high cost of food and our increasingly busy lives, "Come for dessert and coffee at 8:30" is blossoming again. And nowadays — depending on budgets and serving habits — brandy or liqueur is sometimes offered after the dessert.

If you plan such a dessert party you may want to consider serving Lemon Meringue. It is moderate in cost and makes eight servings. It relieves the hostess of last-minute pressure because it calls for chilling from several hours to overnight. This stay in the refriggerator not only sets the filling but mellows the meringue.

If you're already acquainted with Lemon Angel Pie, don't expect Lemon Merinque to be the same although both desserts have a meringue shell and a lemon filling. The Lemon Meringue filling is thickened with both egg yolks and cornstarch and has a firm texture; the Lemon Angel Pie filling is thickened entirely with egg yolks and has a much softer texture.

Pleasant dessert

You can make a meringue shell with a lemon filling at a moderate cost.

LEMON MERINGUE

3 eggs whites
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
2-3rds cup sugar
Lemon Filling, see below

Beat egg whites with cream of tartar until soft peaks that tilt over slightly when beater is slowly withdrawn form. Gradually beat in sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time; continue beating, if necessary, until mixture is thick and glossy and stiff straight peaks form when beater is slowly withdrawn. Spread in a buttered 9-inch pie plate making a slight depression in the center. Bake in a preheated 275-degree oven for 1 hour; turn off oven and let meringue cool in closed oven for 1 additional hour. Remove to wire rack and let cool completely. Make Lemon Filling; turn into meringue shell. Chill several hours or overnight before serving. Makes 8 servings.

LEMON FILLING

1½ cups sugar
6 tablespoons cornstarch
½ cup freshly squeezed lemon juice
3 egg yolks
½ cup cold water
2 tablespoons butter
1½ cups boiling water
1 teaspoon freshly grated lemon rind
1 container (8 ounces) heavy cream

In a 2-quart saucepan thoroughly stir together the sugar and cornstarch; stir in lemon juice. In a small mixing bowl beat egg yolks and cold water until blended; gradually stir into cornstarch mixture, keeping smooth. Add butter. Gradually stir in boiling water, keeping smooth. Cook over moderate heat, stirring gently but constantly, until mixture comes to a full boil; reduce heat and gently boil for 1 minute. Remove from heat and stir in lemon rind. Cover and cool until just warm to the touch. In a medium mixing bowl beat cream until stiff; fold lemon mixture into cream.

Judo expert remains cautious

By S. R. GITTENS
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Rusty Kanokogy has 18 years of experience in the field of martial arts, but she's still a very cautious woman.

Although she says she's not paranoid, Rusty has techniques for detecting a possible attacker. As a matter of fact, she says they might be funny if it weren't for the truth behind them.

"I happen to know what life is in New York, in Brooklyn, or even some out-of-town places," she added.

"As much confidence as I have in my judo, I'm careful when I walk into a public restroom. I check for normal ladies' legs in the place, and if there's an empty stall, I make certain it is empty. I don't want somebody to come in and stick a gun in my neck while I've got my pants down," she said.

Although Rusty doesn't consider herself of the general stature that would attract a mugger — she is 5 feet 9 and "as big as the average guy in looks" — she says it is still inexcusable for women to walk around oblivious to their surroundings.

She says a woman who has had judo training would not find herself in a compromising position without putting up a fight. She explains that judo teaches that the mind cannot effectively be on any two given things at one time.

Judo, Rusty adds, is a reactionary sport.

Now an instructor with the Jerome Mackey School, Rusty holds a fourth degree black belt out of a possible nine degrees. She is considered the highest ranking woman in judo in the nation, and first became interested when a friend taught a class at a YMCA.

Rusty claims that the few times she has ever had to defend herself, she was disappointed that it all happened so quickly.

"One time a guy came behind me on the stairs in a subway station in Coney Island. He grabbed my handbag — and I always keep a tight grip on that. Anyway, he grabbed it, I held on, turned, flipped him over my hip and he fell down the stairs. I ran into a train," she added.

Judo is strictly a sport for Rusty, but she says most of the women who come for training come to learn for self-defense. She says many Americans do not realize that there is a philosophy behind judo. After a few aggressive attempts on their part and a few skilled put-downs by an instructor, they soon learn the courtesies of the sport.

"I've had women come in, honestly, and say to me, 'How long will it take me to kill?' I say, 'Five minutes: go buy yourself a gun.' You know, if that's what they want, why bother going through this whole thing," she asked.

Women and young people are the ones Rusty finds primarily concerned with this area of training. She says men are more interested in the sports aspect. The popularity of television shows and movies featuring the martial arts has generated much interest in lessons, she said.

For herself, there are other realms in judo to explore. She has come in first in her weight division in every competition she entered. Now that Japan has recognized women in judo, she says she would like to see judo in the Olympics for women.

"I'd love to be the U.S. coach," she said. "To be honest, I'd love to compete, but I have a professional status. But if I thought you could get rid of that status by being an amateur for five years, I'd not get paid for five years just to be an amateur."

Help needed for special cleanup

By POLLY CRAMER

DEAR POLLY — My Pet Peeve concerns the lack of large coat hangers to be bought for giving support to men's lightweight jackets and shirts so as to eliminate that droop or sag over the shoulders midway between the collar and shoulder seam. — MISS C.

DEAR POLLY — Loretta wanted to know how to renovate an old ornate gilt frame and I have had some success with the following method. Brush clean, wash if necessary. Mix a small amount of patching plaster to a thick consistency. Using a toothpick, old knitting needle or something similar fill in the chipped or missing pieces. When dry lightly spray several times with a gold spray bomb. — R. N.

DEAR GIRLS — A representative of the paint industry recommends the following way to refinish a gilt frame. "Sand with very fine sandpaper and then apply a high grade gold size. When size is partially dry, but tacky, apply the best quality gold bronze. Dust it on and wipe off the surplus with a soft wad of cotton. After allowing this to dry for several days finish with a thin coat of pure white shellac that is thinned considerably with denatured alcohol. This should keep it from tarnishing for several years. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — To get a faster and more wrinkle-free wash-and-wear drip dry garment, hang it over a plastic bag on a coat hanger and there is no danger of rust, either. — MRS. J. H. E.

Polly's problem

DEAR POLLY — I have a hand crocheted bedspread with fringe around that my mother made about 35 years ago and it is soiled. I do not know how to go about washing this spread or should it be cleaned? I also need to clean the greasy household grime on my hanging lamp chains but nothing seems to work. — Any ideas? — MERALEE.

Ever wondered what all those little numbers mean on your Blue Cross and Blue Shield membership card? Basically, those numbers give us, the doctor and the hospital information we need to pay your medical bill.

That's why it's a good idea to give your card to the receptionist as soon as you enter the doctor's office and ask her to compare the code numbers on your card with the ones she has on file. And that's why it's important that you make sure you show your most recent card so she can record any new benefits you may have added.

We'd like to suggest, too, that when you hand your card to the receptionist you check to see that she has your most current address. And we think it's good to carry your Blue Cross and Blue Shield card with you at all times. You never know when you might need it.

Doing these little things will help us speed the process of paying your doctor and hospital bills. And we want to do that just as much as you want us to.

Housing Authority trims 1974 budget

After trimming $15,640 from its original proposed 1974 budget, the Sedalia Housing Authority voted Monday night to re-submit the budget to the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

HUD rejected the original budget of $308,970, the Rev. Marvin Albright, executive director, said, because it would have been a deficit spending budget, not allowing for any operating reserves.

The new figure of $293,330 was arrived at, Albright said, by trimming the allowances for utilities, labor and materials.

Albright said the new budget will be submitted to HUD for its approval, and until then, the Authority will operate on the January, 1973, budget allotment. Last year's approved budget was $290,550.

Albright told the board that HUD also rejected the bid of Jack Kastor, Dallas, Tex., to do an independent audit of the Authority's financial books, as required by HUD, for $1,556.

Albright said HUD gave him a list of three more firms to seek bids from in an attempt to secure a bid acceptable by HUD. Albright said a HUD official told him if none of these firms submitted bids in line with what HUD feels is an acceptable amount, then the lowest bid would probably be accepted.

Two tenants, Hester Wilson and LaRosa Buford, appeared before the Authority to appeal raises in their rents voted at an executive session of the authority Dec. 10.

According to Albright, the Housing Authority voted to raise the rents after both women failed to appear at the regular Dec. 10 meeting as requested by Albright.

Both womens' rents were raised from a negative rent to $20 a month.

Rental rates, Albright said, are figured according to a schedule in which the rental rate is equal to 25 per cent of the tenant's net income. However, Albright said, when the Authority feels certain that the tenant is not accurately reporting his net income, the tenant's rental rate may be raised accordingly.

Albright declined to comment specifically on the two women's cases.

The board decided Monday night to leave both womens' rents at $20 a month, and then to meet with HUD officials in Kansas City to determine if the board's action in both cases was legal. If the action is considered illegal by HUD, Albright said, the rent money will be refunded to the women.

Albright said the Authority currently needs no "proof positive" that such income reporting discrepancies may exist, but, rather, can raise the rates based "on a strong inclination" that such a circumstance exists.

Clyde Robinson, authority member, said that the authority should also check with HUD on the legality of imposing a minimum rent ceiling for all apartments under the authority's control.

Robinson said having a basic minimum rent would ease the authority's problems of determining the rent level for many families, and cut down on the amount of "checking up" which must be done to determine if renters still fall in the negative or low rent categories.

In connection with the rent problem, Albright told the board 13 tenants will be given their eviction notices Friday if their rent isn't paid by then. He explained the evictions could not legally be accomplished for at least 30 days after the notices are given.

Albright later explained that the 30-day "grace period" is required by HUD.

The tenants being considered for eviction are those who have consistently not paid rent and owe considerable sums to the authority, Albright said.

Albright declined to indicate how much was owed by individual tenants, but stated that "there has been a clamp-down on non-payers of rent." Some of the tenants, he did indicate, "are more than one month behind in paying their rent."

Only one road in county meets state qualifications

The State Highway Commission confirmed Tuesday that only one county road has qualified to be included in the expansion of the state highway system.

The road is west of Houstonia, about two miles long, connecting Highway 127 with Route OO in the northwest section of the county.

In a letter to the county court, the commission said that three other roads had failed to qualify. These roads were submitted for consideration by the Pettis County Highway Commission Jan. 7 after the State Highway Commission said that five other roads previously submitted all failed to qualify.

This decision means that the Pettis County Highway Commission must decide whether to designate the road near Houstonia as the one to be included in the state highway system or submit other roads for consideration.

Under the state plan, county highway commissioners throughout the state had been asked to submit a list of five roads that they wished to be maintained by the state. The plan calls for the addition of only one road per county. The roads are to be blacktopped to meet state standards, on a priority basis, within the next 10 years.

To qualify, a county road has to attain at least eight of 15 points under a system established by the State Highway Commission and be less than $400,000 in cost. The road near Houstonia received nine points and could be built at an estimated $283,000.

Another qualification is that the right-of-way on the road be provided by the landowners. Eastern District Judge E. L. Birdsong said the landowners on the road near Houstonia indicated that they would provide the right-of-way.

The other eight rejected roads each failed to receive the eight-point minimum.

The State Highway Commission requested that the county commission respond before Jan. 25 "in order for us to include the route . . . for construction priorities."

Workmen fight pressure, cold to plug leak

An undetermined amount of water leaked onto city streets early Tuesday morning when a two-inch hole developed in a section of 2¼-inch cast iron pipe at the 2400 block of West First Street Terrace.

City Water Department manager Herb Taylor Tuesday said workmen, responding to a call from police at 3:30 a.m., worked for three hours to plug the hole with a permanent clamper. The pipe was five feet under ground, he said.

Taylor said no homes were damaged by the sudden water flow because the runoff went down First Street Terrace, continued to West Avenue and finally entered a ditch on Main Street.

Although unable to estimate in gallons the amount of water lost, Taylor said "it was a lot." Water department employe Jack Blackwell said a water pressure level of 100 pounds per square inch compounded the problem.

As in the case of an earlier pipe leak New Year's night, Taylor said repair efforts were slowed by the frozen ground, which made digging more difficult again. Like the Jan. 1 incident, Taylor said cold weather did not cause the pipe leak.

"It was just one of those things," Taylor said. "It was possibly caused by corrosion, but not by the cold because it (the pipe) was buried too deep." The exact cause of the problem was not known.

Sedalia residence target of burglars

Burglars broke into the Noah Poole residence, 418 North Washington, sometime Monday evening and made off with 45 8-track tapes, valued at $270, a double-barrel 12-gauge shotgun, worth $100, and a wall clock valued at $25.

Poole told police he left for work at 4 p.m. Monday and when he returned the items were missing. Entry to the house was gained by prying a storm window and raising the inner window, according to police.

In other police news, about a case of liquor was taken during a break-in at Whitaker & Co., 301 East Main, sometime Saturday night, according to police.

The front door of the building was forced to gain entry and the thieves apparently left by a door on the south side of the building. Police reported that about a half-case each of whiskey and gin were taken, and the thieves ransacked the building before leaving.

Celebrations mark King's birthday anniversary

By EARLEEN F. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

In Chicago, the Rev. Jesse Jackson prepared a protest against the Standard Oil Co. because he believed it was the sort of thing Martin Luther King Jr. would have done.

In Atlanta, civic leaders launched a fund-raising drive for the proposed $10-million Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change.

In many schools pupils were excused from classes; in some cities and states it was a holiday.

And so it was across the nation today, as people remembered the 45th anniversary of King's birth.

In Tennessee, where the civil rights leader was slain by an assassin's bullet on April 4, 1968, the House of Representatives was unable to muster enough votes to pass a resolution calling on Congress to make his birthday a national holiday.

The vote in the 99-member house was 34 to 17 in favor of the resolution, 16 votes short of the required 50-vote majority. Opponents said the resolution was unfair because many noteworthy figures in Tennessee history have not had their birthdays declared national holidays.

Mobile home firm under receivership

A request that the real estate and property of the Mo-Mod Sales Co. be sold was filed recently in Pettis County Circuit Court.

The request was made by Donald Barnes, who was appointed receiver by the court in a case stemming from a petition filed Aug. 17, 1973, by Harvey C. Herrick, 3401 South Kentucky, against John L. Sipe, 500 South Grand, and the Mo-Mod Sales Co.

The petition seeks to liquidate the assets and business of the corporation. Assets include a mobile home park and 29 mobile homes on south Highway 65 near the city limits.

Herrick and Sipe, according to the petition, each own half of the corporation.

Barnes was appointed by the court after lawyers for Herrick and Sipe requested the court to name a receiver with the authority to sell and dispose of the assets of the corporation.

After Barnes was appointed, Sipe filed an $85,000 counter claim against Herrick and a $22,500 counter claim against the corporation.

Damages awarded in civil case here

The plaintiffs in a civil suit were awarded $1,750 in damages Friday in Circuit Court here, records show.

The suit was filed by the parents of Teresa Ann and John Wesley Sudduth against the late Sam Harper Jones.

The Sudduths contended that both Teresa and John Sudduth were injured Feb. 6, 1971, in an auto accident on Route B about two miles southwest of Highway 65. The petition said the Sudduths were passengers in a car which collided with a car driven by Jones.

Teresa Sudduth was awarded $1,500 and John Sudduth received $250. Both amounts were requested in the original petition.

Katherine Jones, widow of Sam Harper Jones, was named defendant after the death of her husband. She was the administratrix of the estate of her husband, who died Nov. 9, 1973.

In addition to the six years he spent with the Sedalia police force, Hamlin said he spent three years and eight months in the military rehabilitation field, and worked on the Central Missouri State University security force for over 4 years before his recent retirement.

"I've had a lot of law enforcement experience and schooling," Hamlin said.

C. W. Browning, University of Missouri Extension director for the Show-Me Area, reminded Pettis Countians this week that now is the time when any person in the county 18 years of age or older may vote for members of the County Extension Council.

Those seeking two-year terms on the council are Ed Minor and Jim Ripley, District 4; J. C. Hunton and Quentin Binder, District 6; Frank Maltsbarger and Anthony Simon, District 7; Mrs. Curtis Brosing, Mrs. John Zulauf, Dr. James R. Houchens and the Rev. Browning said ballots were mailed to 1,000 voters Tuesday and that those persons who had not received a ballot and who wished to vote should contact the Extension Center, Fourth and Lamine, to obtain a ballot.

He said all ballots must be postmarked on or before Jan. 31 to be counted in the election.

Besides the mail-in ballots, a county-wide polling place will be maintained at the Extension Office in the Federal Building at Fourth and Lamine in Sedalia from Tuesday morning through Friday evening, it was reported.

Third intoxicated driving charge is felony; man held

A felony charge of driving while intoxicated, third offense, was filed in Magistrate Court Tuesday against William Dale Bentley, 47, Route 2, Houstonia.

Bentley was arrested Saturday by the Highway Patrol on Highway 65 near Routes H and HH. The charge also states Bentley was convicted of drunken driving charges Jan. 5, 1972, in Platte County and Oct. 11, 1973, in Buchanan County.

He remains in the county jail in lieu of $1,000 bond. Feb. 7 was set as his preliminary hearing date.

Two other cases were continued in Magistrate Court Tuesday: William Jackson, the manager of Grant's Department Store, charged with failing to comply with the Sunday "Blue Law;" and Charles E. Smith, 33, Route 4, charged with forgery.

Smith's preliminary hearing was continued to Jan. 29. No date was set for Jackson's hearing. Jackson is charged with a misdemeanor, Smith a felony.

Forty-five are injured in Texas train mishap

ARDMORE, Okla. (AP)—"The last thing I remember is seeing flying glass and flying people."

Mrs. Pricilla Heidner of Austin, Tex., was describing the seconds after all seven cars of Amtrak's crack Texas Chief passenger train, southbound from Chicago to Houston, derailed near here Monday.

Spokesmen at Ardmore's two hospitals said 45 persons were treated for injuries. Sixteen of them remained hospitalized Monday night.

No one was killed but at least two persons were reported seriously injured. Mrs. Don Summers of Arlington, Tex., received a broken back and was listed in serious condition. Mrs. Elene Prather, 56, of Ponca City, Okla., was reported in "very serious" condition.

The others were reported in fair, good or undetermined condition.

The train was reported going 55 miles per hour when it derailed. Several persons were pinned inside the cars for a time before being rescued by workmen with pry bars.

Two of the cars, including the dining car, were turned completely on their sides. The dining car caught fire.

The train's two engines remained on the tracks.

"Everyone and everything was going everywhere," said Mrs. Heidner. She was in the diner, where the most serious injuries occurred. "My first thought was, 'This is the end'."

The train with 115 passengers aboard was just moving through an industrial area in the northeastern outskirts of this south-central Oklahoma city when the cars left the track at 12:05 p.m.

"I just hung on," said Samuel H. Treadway, 74, of Oklahoma City, who was not injured but who appeared shaken. "The car started jumping. I was on the right side of the train and the car began tilting to the left, so to keep from being thrown across the car I just hung on to my seat."

All available ambulances in Ardmore and from surrounding communities were summoned to the wreck site. While the uninjured passengers sat on pieces of wreckage and luggage, doctors and nurses worked among the injured before the ambulances took them to local hospitals.

The most serious injury was believed to be that of a Texas woman whose back was reportedly broken in two places.

John Mills, Amtrak station manager from Fort Worth, said it would be at least a day and a half before the cars could be removed and the damaged track repaired.

"In the meantime, we have rerouted all trains through Tulsa and are offering bus service for passengers over to that line," he said.

"My wife had gone to the snack lounge in the diner," said Treadway, who was en route to Fort Worth. "I hope she wasn't seriously injured."

His fears about his wife were allayed when a nurse told him his wife had suffered only slight injuries.

Wreckage from the cars, baggage and heavy metal undercarriages were strewn over a wide area. About a quarter of a mile of track was torn up.

Don Summers, husband of the woman who received the broken back, said the couple had just started their vacation.

"My wife and I had been attending a company meeting at Groton, Connecticut, and we were going to fly back home, but in Chicago we decided 'what the heck—we've got a whole week to ourselves.'"

Summers' wife, Juliet, is the mother of two grown children and works as an oil company executive's secretary. Summers, 49, is associated with General Dynamics Corp.

Mrs. Summers was among the last removed from the wreckage. She was carefully lowered on a ladder placed at the side of the train car, which was tilting about a 45-degree angle. They had to move her through a window to the upper side.

Summers sustained hip injuries.

"It was the first day of our vacation, and it didn't turn out at all like we planned," said Summers.

Home heating oil future is gloomy

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Last Dec. 1, an independent dealer in the Chicago area was selling home heating oil at 28½ cents a gallon. Today, the same dealer is charging 35 cents a gallon.

That's an increase of almost 23 per cent in six weeks. It reflects the situation throughout the country, according to a spot check of trade associations. Home heating oil prices have risen sharply in the last month, and industry spokesmen say they'll probably rise some more in the future.

In fact, some spokesmen say it may cost you twice as much to heat your home this winter as it did last year. In dollars and cents, the increases can boost your yearly heating bill by $100 or more, depending on how much oil you use and who your supplier is.

If you were lucky enough to have a supplier who is getting domestic oil, you may not be hit too hard. If, however, your dealer depends on imported oil, you'd better be prepared for a real wallop.

The increases will more than offset any monetary savings you might get from turning down your thermostat six degrees in accordance with federal energy regulations that take effect Tuesday.

Annual imports of heating oil refined abroad have risen sharply from a neglible amount five years ago to an estimated 150 million barrels in 1973. That's more than 10 per cent of last year's total supply, according to the National Fuel Oil Institute.

Institute figures show that imported heating oil at the wholesale level cost about four times as much in December as it did in June 1973. There have been similar price increases in heating oil refined in the United States from imported crude oil.

The sharp rise is due principally to big increases in the taxes and royalties collected by the governments of oil producing countries. Domestic crude oil also has risen in price, but not nearly as much.

That means wide variations in price. In some areas, one household — using domestic oil — can pay 40 per cent less for heating oil than the consumer next door who is supplied with foreign oil. And it makes it almost impossible to come up with a nationwide average cost.

A spokesman for the National Fuel Oil Institute said domestic oil should average about .24 cents a gallon. But consumers getting foreign oil may pay 40 cents a gallon.

Sen. Jones hurt in auto accident

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Missouri Sen. A. Clifford Jones, R-Brentwood, sustained minor facial cuts and a chipped tooth Monday night when his auto hit a parked car and crashed through a plate glass window, police and firemen said.

Policeman Steve Welsh said Jones' car burst into flames after hitting the Schriefer's Inc., typewriter shop.

Jones is the Republican floor leader in the state Senate.

In Russia, craftsmen made artificial eggs for Easter ranging from simple models in stone or porcelain to the precious gold and gem creations of Carl Faberge.

Oregon gas plan

Gas station manager James Upshaw takes down the green flag and replaces it with the yellow at his Portland, Ore., station as a gas rationing plan went into effect Monday in Oregon. Stations showing the green flag will service autos bearing an even numbered last digit on their license plates on even numbered days, odd numbered plates on odd numbered days. A yellow flag means the station is servicing regular customers only. A red flag means the station is out of gas. (UPI)

Camp wants Corrections Dept. under Public Safety

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — House Reorganization Committee members grilled corrections chief George Camp Monday as to why he wanted the Corrections Department under the Department of Public Safety when a year ago the governor's office wanted it in the social services department.

Reps. Murray Stone, D-St. Louis county, and San Piekarski Jr., D-St. Louis, said they could not understand how the department could effectively rehabilitate prisoners in the Public Safety Department where there would be nothing except law enforcement programs to relate to.

Camp said he thought it would be easier to "sell" corrections to the public if it were in the Department of Public Safety along with the Missouri Highway Patrol and the Liquor Control Division.

Rep. Wayne Goode, D-Normandy, pointed out that the governor's office had reversed its position. Charles Valier, legislative aide to Gov. Christopher S. Bond, said the governor deferred to Camp's wishes after the new corrections chief had been in the job six months.

"I want to know what programs the highway patrol has that could help a person become a better citizen?" Stone asked without getting an answer.

Earlier, the committee accepted Goode's amendment to have the state tourism commission combined with the Division of Commerce and Development the Senate-approved bill the House committee has been working over.

The Tourism Commission would have an advisory capacity. Goode said he didn't like the idea of having industry representatives on a commission controlling a state agency.

After a long debate on the Senate floor, the Tourism Commission was reinstated in reorganization as an independent agency.

The committee also reduced authority of the Public Service Commission and made it just another division in the new Department of Consumer Affairs, regulation and licensing, subject to control of the department director. The Senate bill had reinstated it as an almost autonomous agency.

The House committee also undid the Senate's stipulation of advice and consent of the Senate, with appointment by the governor, of the directors for the division of finance, savings and loan, insurance and commerce and industrial development.

The poultry and fruit experiment stations were returned to the University of Missouri. The Senate had given the fruit station to Southwest Missouri State University and the poultry station to the Agriculture Department. The two stations now are categorized in the Education Department.

Ed Staples, a consultant to the Missouri Public Expenditure Survey, offered a series of amendments to the Senate bill and criticized the Senate's retention of consent over appointments other than of the department heads.

"Many state agencies feel that they are important enough for their heads to be appointed by the governor and report directly to him, instead of being supervised by a department head," Staples said. "that is a critical issue of reorganization. In it lies the difference between whether departments will operate as departments, or whether we will have departments in name only."

Education funds topic of Eagleton

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., Monday urged educators to impress on the Nixon administration and Congress the country cannot afford to cut education spending while giving the Pentagon a blank check.

Speaking to a joint meeting of the Missouri School Board Association and the Missouri Association of School Administrators, he said the educators are in a position to give strong support to new education laws and to increased appropriations.

He said he favored increasing the federal share of the cost of supporting public education.

Eagleton was here to open an eight-day tour of the state.

Speaking in Moberly Monday, Eagleton said he no longer sees a need for gasoline rationing if the Nixon administration's figures on the oil shortage are correct.

Eagleton said he favored rationing last year when there was a projected shortfall of between three million and three and one-half million barrels of oil a day. He said latest figures from the Federal Energy Office show a shortfall of only about 800,000 barrels a day.

Three men sought in burglary-murder

TROY, Mo. (AP) — Lincoln County authorities say they are seeking three men, last seen in a van-type vehicle with Texas license plates, for questioning in connection with a burglary-murder.

Sheriff's officers said Gerald L. Lavy, 25, found his wife, Bernice, 20, dead in the bedroom of their mobile home about 5-miles east of Troy near Missouri 47 early Monday. Officers said she apparently died of a blow to the head.

The home had been burglarized, according to the officers.

Camp has recommended abandoning the archaic penitentiary at Jefferson City in favor of new regional facilities with lower inmate populations.

Environmental affairs Ehrlichman's goal now

SEATTLE (AP) — John D. Ehrlichman, whose friends have started a trust fund to help pay for his legal expenses, is struggling to re-establish himself with a law practice specializing in environmental affairs.

Ehrlichman resigned as chief domestic adviser to President Nixon last spring in the wake of the Watergate scandals.

Since then he has created a four-person Land Use Group designed to advise real estate developers on environmental protection laws. He also handles other unspecified legal business.

Ehrlichman talked about his current activities and the dozen legal actions pending against him during an exclusive two-hour interview Monday.

He said, "Knowing what I know about the facts" of the charges against him, "I think I've got good reason to be optimistic."

Ehrlichman would not discuss his legal expenses but said in answer to a question:

"There's a trust fund that has been created. Some people have come forward in order to help out. Up to this point, there has been no active solicitation, but there have been some voluntary contributions."

He faces 10 civil suits, as well as criminal charges in Los Angeles in connection with the 1971 burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist. And there remains the potential for criminal charges stemming from Watergate-related probes in Washington, D.C.

Ehrlichman would not say what he and special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski discussed in Washington last week. But he labeled as untrue a Los Angeles Times story that said Ehrlichman was offered a deal in return for cooperation in Watergate prosecutions.

Ehrlichman said he still expects the White House tapes, which he stressed he has not heard, will vindicate him of charges in the Ellsberg case. Ellsberg was acquitted in the Pentagon papers trial.

Ehrlichman, 48, lived here before joining the Nixon campaign in 1968 and serving a subsequent four-year White House hitch.

Ehrlichman was more subdued than in a news conference last August on the subject of President Nixon's prospects for fully recovering from the effects of the scandals.

Ehrlichman said in August, just after testifying before the Senate Watergate Committee, that the administration would recover any lost "force and vitality" within weeks.

Asked if he thinks the administration can still recover, he said:

"I think it could have at that time. I think there have been some intervening and superseding events that have made it now more difficult, but I still think it can be done."

"Public support is a very fickle thing. It has it's ups and downs. Congressional reaction is very volatile. The moods of the City of Washington are subject to extreme swings from one to the other, and I see them. I've seen it swing both ways, very fast.

"So I really don't think that I'm being unrealistically optimistic in saying that it could happen."

Lost art work on display

DETROIT (AP) — A long-lost major work by the 17th century Italian artist Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio has gone on public display at The Detroit Institute of Arts.

Dr. Frederick J. Cummings, the museum's director, says the painting, "The Conversion of the Magdalene," could prove to be the most important acquisition by an Ameican museum in a decade.

The display will be the first continuous showing of the work in about 400 years, museum officials said.

The painting, only one of four Caravaggios in the United States, was purchased in 1971 for $1.1 million by the S.S. Kresge Foundation and Mrs. Edsel B. Ford, daughter-in-law of the founder of the Ford Motor Co. It was subsequently donated to the museum.

Cummings said it took the institute's staff 10 months to authenticate and restore the masterpiece.

"It is a very, very rare painting," Cummings said at unveiling ceremonies Monday.

He said Caravaggio is considered to have initiated the brief baroque era in painting, which he said brought "the message of the Christian drama ... down to the level of the man in the street."

In Caravaggio's style, the use of light was used to dramatize a story so the 17th century peasant could understand it easily. The technique helped establish Caravaggio as a major Western artist.

Done in 1598, the painting was rediscovered when the Alzagas, a wealthy Argentine family, put it on sale in London in 1971. The Alzagas had owned the Caravaggio for three generations.

Speaker urges more women's study courses

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Role classification makes it difficult for today's woman to break out of one of three stereotyped roles that have been cast upon her—maternal, wife and decorative items.

That analysis was given Monday night by Shelia Tobias, provost administrator at Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., in an address to 300 students and faculty members at Stephens College.

Known as one of the earliest advocates in the field of women's studies, she spoke on "Sexual Politics in the Classroom."

She said the maternal woman includes those in helping professions such as secretaries, assistants to the presidents, etc. She said decorative women include stewardesses, hostesses, etc.

Women will be completely liberated when they can marry men younger, shorter and dumber than they are, the speaker said.

She called for more women's study courses to raise the consciousness levels and introduce women to more academic disciplines.

Corrections Department given budget priority

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Corrections Department has few friends in the Missouri Legislature, but Gov. Christopher S. Bond has given it priority status in his proposed new budget for 1974-75.

It was one of the few departments for which increased spending was asked Tuesday in Bond's budget address to the legislature.

Bond said the Corrections Department has been long neglected. "One of the surest ways to protect the essential right of each citizen to safety from criminal attack is to cut down on the number of offenders who go through our corrections system and then commit crimes again," he said.

The budget calls for a 22 per cent increase for operating funds in the Corrections Department, mainly to increase the starting salaries for officers, which at $448 a month is among the lowest in the nation. New programs for inmate education, health, recreation and vocational training also are included.

Twenty-five more probation and parole officers also are requested as well as money to provide six months of supervision for offenders who are released prior to the expiration of their sentence but do not get parole supervision.

The budget includes $7 million for either one large or two small adult regional prisons and two new juvenile detention facilities at $1.1 million each, with these to be located at St. Louis and Kansas City. Also recommended are three additional group homes for separating youthful offenders from hard-core criminals.

The legislative Fiscal Affairs Committee last fall rejected a request by Corrections Director George M. Camp to grant pay hikes to officers at the same time other state employes were getting raises because of inequities in pay scales.

Camp is seeking an emergency appropriation to get the needed pay raises, which he said would allow the department to employ more qualified help.

California woman finds profits in soap operas

By NANCY DAY
Associated Press Writer

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Bryna Laub watches 14 soap operas a day and usually keeps at least one of her six television sets on until the nighttime signoffs.

"I just love television," says the 28-year-old Boston University geology graduate.

Once warned by friends that "my brain was going to jell" from so much television exposure, Mrs. Laub has turned her hobby into a business.

Her "Daytime Serial Newsletter" summarizes soap opera plots for viewers who must miss a few installments of their favorites.

"The mind that was starting to jell is suddenly brilliant," she chuckled during an interview.

For $7.50 a year, the monthly newsletter provides facts readers need to keep abreast of developments, such as this "As the World Turns" excerpt:

"Since learning from Bob's ramblings under anesthesia following his emergency surgery that during their separation he spent one night with her sister Kim which resulted in Kim's pregnancy, Jennifer Hughes is devastated...."

Mrs. Laub says subscriptions are coming in at a rate of 20 per day, but "I won't mention total figures until it tops 10,000."

The publication debuted last December in Newton, Mass., where the Laubs lived until her engineer husband, Bernard, got a job in California.

It was Laub who hatched his wife's career, she says, by remarking "Too bad you can't get paid for watching TV." Then he provided investment capital for extra televisions, tape recorders, a burglar alarm system and a portable 'Video Voice' that receives only the sound of television broadcasts.

The voice lets her listen to the soaps when it's her turn in the neighborhood car pool. Mrs. Laub can recognize every character by voice alone, but on those rare occasions when she must be entirely out of touch, a crew of housewives fills in.

At home, Mrs. Laub doesn't just plant herself in front of the four sets in her living room all day. A big color set dominates one corner; a small back-up black and white sits on the floor beside it in case one of the others breaks down.

The other two, on a desk and the kitchen bar, can be turned to where Mrs. Laub can keep an eye on them while cooking, cleaning or answering her mail.

She has two more upstairs.

Mrs. Laub can monitor three shows simultaneously. She takes notes on one but stays alert to the other two and their companion tape recorders.

Armed service and diplomatic corps wives overseas are among her audience, as are women recently returned to work. She estimates about 15 per cent of her customers are men, although "some subscribe under their secretary's name."

For more than 50 years, people have looked for treasure in Advocate Harbor, N.S. The latest find of coins was in 1952.

Beauty shop owner dies in fire effort

HURLEY, Mo. (AP) — The owner of a small beauty shop in this Stone County community died of an apparent heart attack late Monday night while trying to retrieve supplies from her burning shop.

Authorities say Mrs. Edward Dean, believed to be in her mid 50s, rushed to the shop when a fire was discovered about 9 p.m. She first tried to help put the blaze out, then began carrying supplies out when the fire began to grow.

She reportedly collapsed on the sidewalk in front of the shop after carrying out some supplies.

New drunk driving law

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A tough drunk driving law introduced for the Attorney General's Office will stand constitutional tests, Atty. Gen. John C. Danforth said Monday.

Danforth, noting the bill had been criticized, said in a letter to the sponsor, Rep. Harvold Lowenstein, R-Kansas City, said similar laws are on the books in Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Danforth, who attacked court decisions upholding provisions of the proposed law, said a representative had called it "asinine."

The attorney general said the attacks were "wholly without merit."

The bill would:

—Eliminate the current 12-point demerit system and allow the State Director of Revenue to revoke a license within seven days after a drunk driving arrest. The driver could appeal.

—Allow only circuit judges to grant hardship driving privileges.

—Drivers whose licenses have been revoked will have their vehicles seized as contraband.

Wall Streeters fear halt of foreign capital

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Some Wall Streeters are becoming concerned that their battered stock market, which conceivably could have gained from the world's oil problems, will be dealt still another blow instead.

Hopes had risen on the expectation that Europeans and others would view the United States as the least affected by rising oil prices and thus afford a relatively safe haven for their investments.

The theory still looks good to securities analysts, but the suspicion is growing that foreign governments might take precisely the opposite viewpoint and call a halt to such transactions.

This is how one Wall Streeter, Peter J. Tanous, vice president and manager of international sales for Smith, Barney & Co., expressed his fears:

"As foreigners seek better havens for their capital, such as in the relatively more attractive dollar and U.S. stock market, they could aggravate their own country's balance of payments problems ...

"Most countries simply will not let this happen. As the trend develops, many European nations may well again impose exchange controls or tighten existing ones prohibiting or severely restricting currency outflows."

And so, as Tanous views the situation, the securities industry becomes the victim of still another paradox: it is too attractive for its own good.

If European nations act to restrict outflows of their currencies — and, says Tanous, it could occur soon — "American brokers may be faced with a decline in European trading on U.S. exchanges such as one that occurred in 1970."

In that year, total foreign trading on U.S. exchanges dropped more than $6 billion, from $23.3 billion in 1969 to $17.2 billion. The removal of foreign support in that year was partly responsible for one of the sharpest price declines in decades.

European investors returned to the American market in 1972 and continued to be active through 1973.

Now, however, all European nations face a serious threat to their economic prospects, with the consequences expected to show up quickly in declining foreign trade balances and weakened currencies.

"It is hard to imagine how the European countries can make up a $33 billion annual shortfall on their oil bill," Tanous comments.

If foreign governments do restrict currency outflows, he maintains that "the amount of business will be a far cry from the optimistic predictions of foreign interest that are still being heard today."

November motor fuel taxes higher

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The amount of motor fuel taxed in Missouri in 1973 through November was running 3.57 per cent over the 1972 total, Revenue Department records showed today.

The number of gallons taxed in November totaled 245,752,684 compared with 230,932,387 in October. December totals have not been compiled.

The total gallons taxed in 1973 through November was 2.41 billion. The total for all 12 months in 1972 was 2.68 billion.

Historians claim that the first white person in North America was born in Newfoundland more than 1,000 years ago.

Student trustee beaten

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — "I will not be intimidated," said Matthew Rich Monday following a beating by two masked men who threatened him.

Rich, 19, the student member of the Southern Illinois University-Carbondale Board of Trustees, told police that he was attacked late Sunday as he walked from the main entrance of the board of trustee's staff building on the school's campus.

The sophomore, who became the first student member of the board after a disputed election last month, said the men pushed him into an alcove, beat him and told him to resign from the board. Authorities said he was treated for a four-inch cut on his hand and other cuts and bruises at a local hospital.

Authorities said they were still seeking the two assailants.

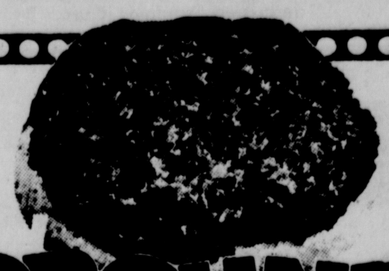

The Student Government Association has announced that it will hold hearings soon into the disputes that arose during the campaign and on the day of the election itself.

The truckers — Part II

Independents' risks bring rewards

By TOM TIEDE

COLUMBIA, N.J. (NEA) — Last summer Bob Coleman invested $5,000 in a business opportunity that is already returning a salary of $500 to $1,500 a week and may before the first anniversary of the deal gross him as much as $50,000.

He put a down payment on a truck.

Coleman, 41, is what is known in the trucking industry as an independent. After 15 years of working for somebody else, he has gone into business for himself. With the help of a finance company he owns his own rig, is his own boss, sets his own pace and is increasing his speed on the road of success.

The American Trucking Association guesses there are as many as 120,000 independent owner-operators in the nation today — and despite the howls of protest heard from them lately, they have in recent years been making it rather well.

Not that it's all easy. The idea of independence usually carries with it the spirit of ambition. Columbia truck stop manager Tony Zamparelli, himself an owner-operator for years, says the Independents are usually harder working and more reliable than the company drivers: "They have to be. They have only themselves for security. Nobody is guaranteeing them so much a week for so many hours. They have to get out and hustle."

Bob Coleman, as example, hustles six days a week, around the clock. When there is enough work he makes three $500 round trips between western Pennsylvania and New York City. He hauls shrimp cocktail glasses one day, roll paper the other. To make time he ignores sleep rules, exceeds the speed limits and gives up family comforts. "I see my wife one day a week; if I got a hole in my roof, she gets a carpenter to fix it."

Such pushing almost guarantees problems. One is that Coleman is currently facing a suspension of his license for speeding. "A Smokey pulled me over up around Erie. He said I was going 72. Now I don't mind paying the fine, but in Pennsylvania (for truckers) it's almost an automatic suspension of license. A private car can speed and get away with it. Me, I may lose my license. Now I gotta hire a lawyer and fight the case."

Besides this, inflating expenses are dimming the glitter for highballing independents. Coleman, for instance, has monthly payments of $800 on his $32,000 International truck. Fuel which once cost $26 a hundred gallons now costs $40 and this adds $400 a month to his petrol tab. Twice a year he gets $800 worth of tires. Once a year he pays $400 for a tuneup. If a clutch goes out it can cost up to $1,500. And, as his own employer, he must pay his own Social Security, pension, hospital and life insurance — some $2,000 annually.

The result of it is that his $50,000 (maximum) first-year salary will be cut in half or more by operating costs.

Indeed, the erosive expenses have of late reduced the steady growth of the owner-operator ranks. Bill "Haystack" Fleener, a company driver out of Iowa, says he dreamed for years of owning his own rig, but no more: "These days it's just asking for misery." Even some of the independents are betting out, or being forced out. Italian-born driver Manuel Casdinira bought his own truck a decade ago and now wishes he hadn't.

"With all these prices I can't stay in business. I just paid $2,100 for transmission repair and I don't know if the insurance will cover it. On the Ohio Turnpike they limit me to 10 gallons per truck stop, because of the shortages, so I got to stay in two or three lines up to an hour each. If I could I'd sell my truck today — but the used truck lots are full already. Maybe I should be back in Italy; it ain't no good there, but it's getting even worse over here."

Yet with it all, and forgetting the present hard times, there can be no doubt that truck driving often is handsomely rewarding. Even before, he bought his own tractor, Bob Coleman was making $18,900 a year, and now, if inflation does not get worse, he expected $23,000-$24,000. Not bad. In fact, very good.

And the job itself is not the nightmare many imagine it to be. The public imagination that road runners are liquored up against the cold, popping bennies to ward off the sandman and sitting in a bucket of grease is false. Coleman, as example, rides in a cab as comfortable as a Cadillac. He is freshly dressed, clean shaven, well fed. He sits 12 feet off the road, high enough to see the real beauty of some of today's superroute scenery, and says he wouldn't have it any other way:

"My wife thinks I'm nuts. But I just enjoy this. It may seem boring to others, but it's never that way to me. You never really master one of these rigs, you never really see all there is to see. Hell, I'd drive nationwide if my wife would let me."

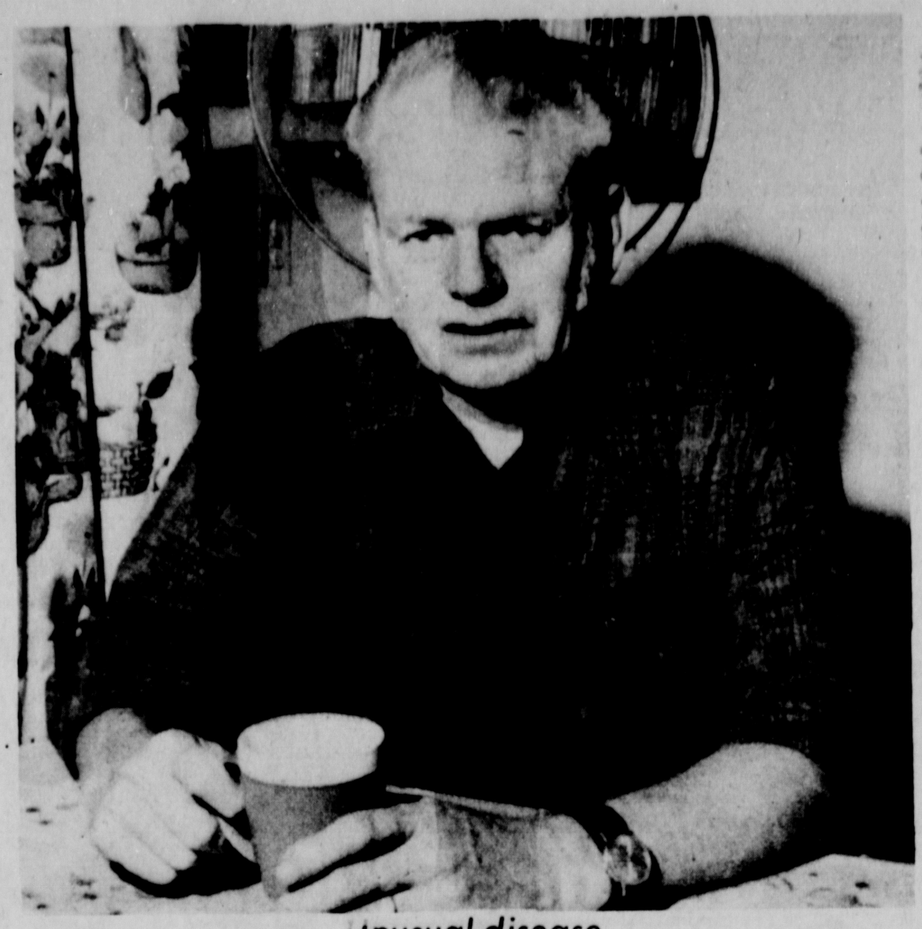

There are the annoyances, of course. It is no joy to bust a steering tire with 50,000 pounds in the trailer. It is also unprofitable to drive a load one way, as Coleman sometimes does, and come back empty ("During the energy crisis, I think the government should arrange pools to guarantee against empty trucks; there should be central numbers to call in all areas so you can pick a cargo up").

And, too, there are the unseen and terrible hazards; the records are full of stories such as the one in New Jersey where a trucker swerved to miss a drunk driver, crashed through the guardrail, flipped over and died in the horrible crunch.

With it all, most truckers believe the risks and the other high-lows of the business are worth it. Thus most do not wholeheartedly go along with the scary business of recent weeks when strikes and highway blockages became vogue.

Says Bob Coleman: "I shut my rig down not because I agreed with striking, but because I didn't want someone to smash my windshield. I don't like the high prices any more than anybody. I suppose they could even put me out of business. But blocking highways don't do any good. You might not make much profit driving these days — but if you don't drive at all you are sure aren't gonna make any."

Hearing on bank funds scheduled

KANSAS CITY (AP) — U.S. Magistrate Calvin K. Hamilton Monday set Jan. 24 as the date for an omnibus hearing in Springfield for two Arkansas men, one of them a former state senator. They are accused in a grand jury indictment of misapplication of funds of the First State Bank of Joplin, Mo.

Free on $5,000 signature bonds are Byrum Hurst Sr., and Truman Altenbaumer, both of Hot Springs.

Hurst, 55, served 22 years as a state senator and was president pro tem of the Arkansas Senate until 1972 when he made an unsuccessful race for governor.

Altenbaumer, 41, is operator of Mobile Home Village in Hot Springs.

Hurst was charged in eight counts of the indictment with fabricating loans involving bank funds which he allegedly converted to his own use. At the time the alleged offenses occurred, in 1972, Hurst was president and chairman of the board of directors of the bank.

Altenbaumer, who was named in one count of the indictment, was a director of the bank when the alleged offenses occurred.

Says Missouri women resent discrimination

FULTON, Mo. (AP) — The working women in Missouri resent being treated as inferior by the law, University of Missouri law professor Joan Krauskopf said here Monday night.

Speaking on the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution at Westminster College, Mrs. Krauskopf noted that most of the women that have jobs are working for wages, and she pointed out that the number includes more than half of the women with children aged 6 to 17 and 34 per cent of those with children under 6 years old.

"The promise of America has been equal rights under the law for each individual," she told her college audience. "Yet the Supreme Court has consistently accorded great protection against discrimination based on race while permitting discrimination on the basis of sex."

Award winner

A bad year for family economics

Americans, in case they didn't know it, were on an economic treadmill last year, on which they had to run faster and faster simply to stay even.

The staff of the Joint Economic Committee (JEC) of Congress has issued a report showing that a middle-income family had to spend $1,168 more last year than in 1972 just to maintain its 1972 standard of living.

Such a family, making $12,614 a year, was forced to spend $502 more for food in 1973, $165 more for housing, $57 more for clothing and personal needs and $30 more for transportation. In addition, it shelled out 46 per cent more than in 1972 in taxes and Social Security payments.

Overall, the inflation rate in 1973 averaged out at 8.7 per cent, while the wholesale price index shot up 19 per cent.

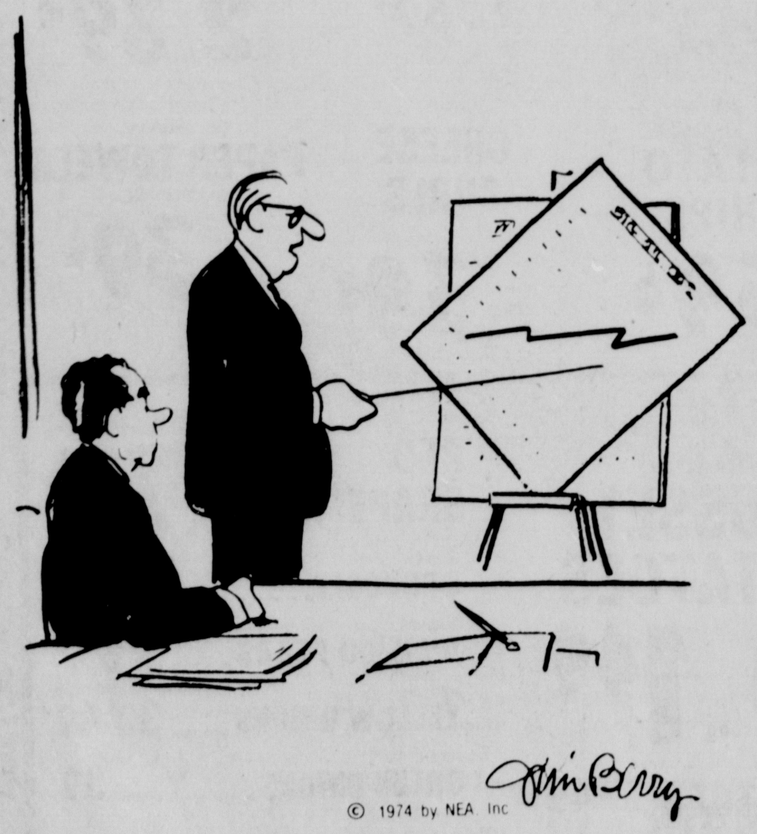

Unfortunately, 1974 looks like it will offer a lot more of the same, according to the JEC. Inflation can be expected to continue and unemployment, part of it directly attributable to the energy crisis, will go up.

This is a prescription for national gloom. Is it any wonder, as the Women's Christian Temperance Union claims, that more Americans are turning to drink to escape their worries over economic problems?

The WCTU wants a return to prohibition to help eliminate alcoholism. Unfortunately, this would still leave the big problem.

With news like that announced by the Joint Economic Committee, a little belt now and then might not be such a bad idea.

"... As you can see, the profit picture for oil companies isn't all THAT bright ..."

Editor's mail

Pro and con-spiracy

In response to your editorial, "Conspiracy Theory of the Energy Crisis," ... the conspiracy theory is not as far from reality as your Jan. 10 editorial suggests.

I agree with Representative Burlison as to the feasibility of "selling out" of the present administration. For example, when the five major oil companies, who control 80 per cent of ALL energy in a nation, conspire to raise domestic prices inventory oil before the more expensive foreign oil ever arrives. Yet the government condones this rise in prices. One has only to think that the overly large campaign contributions (approximately $5.5 million) donated by these oil corporations and their executives have a tendency to sway the governmental decisions.

It is somewhat obvious to me that this administration condones such manipulation.

... I won't say that there is definitely not an energy crisis; but the American government could have foreseen this crisis many years ago—even in 1968. What has been done to avoid such a shortage?

I agree that the answer is not as simple as pinpointing one cause. In my opinion I have pointed to one of the major causes, government and oil conglomerates.

Rt. 2, Cole Camp — Jean French

Art Buchwald

Making the Arabs into superpowers

WASHINGTON — The French have just made a new deal with Saudi Arabia — oil in exchange for Mirage airplanes and sophisticated arms. The British are in the process of making a similar deal with other Arab oil-producing countries including the tiny sheikdoms along the Persian Gulf.

Buchwald

The cruel fact is that in order to guarantee an adequate fuel supply for itself, any industrialized nation is now willing to give the Arabs all the weapons they want.

The big question is how much sophisticated armaments can the oil-producing Arab states absorb? Most of their land is covered with sand inhabited by Bedouins who still are not quite used to the sudden wealth that is being showered on them.

The following scene will probably take place in a year or two:

A Bedouin camp 300 miles from the Saudi Arabian capital of Riyadh. The chief of the area pulls up in a brand-new British armored personnel carrier.

"Ahmed," shouts the chief, "you lazy lout, wake up and come out of your tent. I have a gift from the king for you!"

Ahmed rushes out of the tent. "Did you bring me a camel?"

"I did better than that, my desert friend. See what I have on the back of the new British armored personnel carrier?"

Ahmed follows him to the rear of the truck.

The chief strips off the canvas from the object he has in tow.

"What is it?" Ahmed asks, staring at the strange machine.

"It is the latest French fighter plane, the Phantom-Mirage. It will fly at speeds over 1,100 miles an hour and can carry six air-to-air supersonic missiles. Now what do you say?"

"I still would rather have a camel," Ahmed replies.

"How dare you talk that way about a gift from your most gracious sovereign?"

"Forgive me," Ahmed says fearfully, "but I already have four British fighters, six American Sky Hawks and seven heavy armored helicopters out behind my tent. What I really need is something that can cross the desert and doesn't use up water."

"I will forget I heard your treasonous words. His majesty has vowed that every citizen in his country will have a complete air squadron of his own by 1977. Now where do you want us to put the Mirage?"

"Put it next to the British Centaur tanks you brought me last week. Are you sure I was supposed to get 30 tanks? You know we don't have any children."

The chief checked in his book. "That's correct. You are to have 30 tanks, plus 2,000 rounds of armor-piercing cannon shells."

"Are you certain his majesty didn't mention anything about giving me a camel? You see my old one is on his last legs, and if I could get a new camel I could sell the dates from the Wadi Oasis and go to the market at Medina and ..."

"Silence, you ungrateful wretch. The next thing you will tell me is that you don't want a nuclear submarine."

"A nuclear submarine?"

"That is right. The French have agreed to sell us 1,000 nuclear submarines in exchange for 1,000 barrels of oil. As soon as we get the transportation we will be delivering one to you."

Ahmed sighs. "All right. But if you can't get me a camel, what about a donkey? I could make do with a donkey until I have enough money to buy a camel."

The chief got back on his armored personnel carrier and just laughed. "What industrialized country in the world would give us a donkey?"

A conservative view

Two laws awaiting Congress

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — Eugene McCarthy, the incumbent poet and former politician, was remarking the other day upon a small bit of show biz that I do for the CBS 60 Minutes show. The format calls for a mini-debate in which each side has only 90 seconds. I said the time limit doesn't permit an idea to be developed very fully.

"Don't worry," said the philosopher. "The popular attention span doesn't go past 90 seconds anyhow."

McCarthy was exaggerating, which is of course the first privilege of a poet-politician. The popular attention span, so far as public affairs are concerned, actually is closer to 2 minutes, 15 seconds. Beyond that point, the typical voter would rather go bowling.

Kilpatrick

On balance, this tendency toward the monumental yawn is doubtless a good thing: It is one of those brakes against impulse that keep our political machinery from flying off in all directions. If the public attention cannot be concentrated on a given issue for more than 90 to 135 seconds, figuratively speaking, most popular movements will run out of gas before they reach their destination. This perfectly suits the conservative mind, which views most popular movements with suspicion anyhow.

Yet there are times when one wishes, forlornly, that an occasional head of steam could be maintained. Two efforts will serve as examples — the effort to revise the system by which we elect a president, and the effort to halt racial-balance busing in the public schools.

This week's mail brings a modest report from the 44th American Assembly which met some weeks ago at Arden House, calling for major changes in our presidential procedures. The Assembly is a liberal outfit, which means, perforce, that most of its recommendations naturally strike me as folly, but that is not the point. The point is that some election reforms are indeed sorely needed, but in January of 1974 almost no one wants to be bothered.

This was not the case in January of 1969. George Wallace had just scared the pants off the two-party establishment in the November election of 1968. He had won 45 electoral votes in five states and been presented with one maverick vote in North Carolina. Meanwhile, Nixon and Humphrey were battling down to the last precinct.

A few days after the returns were final, we were all playing the numbers game: A switch to Humphrey of 45,000 votes in Ohio and 10,000 in Missouri — only 55,000 votes out of 73.2 million cast — would have reduced Nixon's electoral votes to 265, short of a clear majority, and thrown the election into the House. Or, as an alternative, Wallace might have traded his 46 votes to the highest bidder within the electoral college.

Five years ago, after that perilous experience, electoral reform was all the rage. But as the months passed, all the steam seeped away. The 90 seconds ran out. Today the Arden House philosophers are hollering down a rain barrel.

So, too, with this business of racial-balance busing. This involves the assignment of children to public schools on one criterion only: the color of their skins. This was precisely what the Supreme Court held unconstitutional in the famous Brown case of 1954. In a bizarre reversal of position, the court now finds such racial classifications imperative. If racial-balance busing is to be halted, a constitutional amendment may be required.

Breakthrough seen in shale technique

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — With unconcealed excitement, the Federal Energy Office is investigating a revolutionary technique for extracting oil from shale at a cheap $1.18 a barrel without massive ecological damage.

Energy czar William Simon is talking privately of an all-out government effort, on the scale of the Manhattan Project which developed atomic energy, to bleed the mountains of Colorado, Utah and Wyoming of critically needed oil.

An estimated 1.8 trillion barrels of oil, nearly three times the world's present proven reserves, is locked in the shale rock formations of the Rockies. At the current rate of consumption, this would be enough to supply United States oil needs for 140 years.

The problem is separating the oil from the rock. Previous proposals called for extensive strip mining, which would devastate the Western scenery. The shale would be heated until the oil dripped out. But the heat would also expand the rock, which would have to be discarded in huge, unsightly piles. New mountains of discarded shale literally would be created.

But now Occidental Petroleum has developed a way to extract the oil inside the mountains, without the massive strip mining and monstrous shale dumps. Even more promising, the Occidental process would reduce the cost from around five dollars to $1.18 a barrel.

The cost estimates were made by an independent Stanford research group, which studied Occidental's pilot project in Colorado. The final cost of delivering the oil to suppliers, after all the pumping and piping has been figured in, would run between two dollars and three dollars a barrel.

The Occidental method consists essentially of blasting a chamber inside the oil-bearing rock formation. Natural gas is then injected into the chamber and fired. This produces intense temperatures, which separates the oil from the rock. The oil seeps to the bottom of the formation, where it is pumped away.

The expanding shale gradually fills up the chamber and the mountain is left virtually undisturbed except for the mining shaft required to gain entrance.

Occidental's enterprising chairman, Dr. Armand Hammer, showed a movie of the new process the other day to Simon and his staff. Simon's experts then questioned the Occidental technicians thoroughly.

The energy czar came away from the briefing highly impressed. He is now preparing to send his specialists to Colorado to study the Occidental operation firsthand. A crash program, say the Occidental engineers, could relieve the U.S. oil shortage within three years.

NIXON'S SOUND SYSTEM: Despite President Nixon's extreme sensitivity over the Watergate tapes, he now wants to install a new recording system in the White House.

It won't be used, however, to make secret tapes of the conversations in the oval office, a la Watergate, but to record the crooners and comedians who perform at official White House functions in the East Room.

The President's communications experts want a sound system so sophisticated it may never be built. Motivated perhaps by those "sinister forces" that wiped out an 18-minute segment of a crucial Watergate tape, they also want a back-up unit.

The specifications, sent confidentially to potential bidders, call for "two mixing consoles" capable of taking the sounds from 16 different microphones and then mixing them onto a two-track stereo tape.

Although the system is supposed to be used in the White House, which is buffeted only by the President's tirades and has been cooled down only to 68 degrees, the two identical consoles must survive "a shock of five G's" and temperatures 80 degrees below zero. Indeed, they must be able to "operate" at freezing temperatures and in a thundering downpour.

The men who operate these electronic marvels, furthermore, may have to do it in the dark. Declares the document: "The console will, at times, be operated in the East Room ... under extremely low light conditions. Illumination must not allow any noticeable spill over of light over the front of the console as this will be in view of both the East Room audience and the performers as well as the President."

Unlike Rose Mary Woods' tape recorder, the new sound system is also supposed to be designed with the best fail-safe features that modern technology can provide.

We consulted half-a-dozen sound engineers and technicians, who estimated the two fancy consoles will cost the taxpayers more than $200,000.

One expert described the proposed sound system as "space-age technology." Another called it "a highly professional system requiring extremely sophisticated engineering." A third declared flatly that "no one in the country can build the thing the way they want it."

Some of the engineers we consulted made comments that might interest the Watergate prosecutors. They cited the highly detailed specifications as evidence that the White House communications experts are far too professional to produce tape recordings marred with erasures and excessive background noises.

Commander Tom Coats of the White House Communications Agency, who prepared the solicitation offer, explained he was trying to obtain "the best and most economical system" available. Having given us his "position on this," the commander declared he could not "talk about it anymore" and refused to answer further questions.

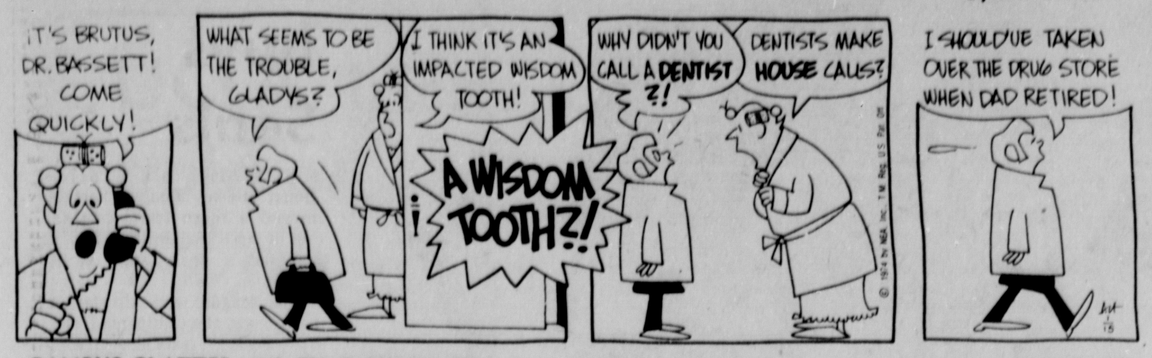

FOONOTE: Until the Nixon takeover, the Marine Corps has recorded the performances at the White House. The master tapes were filed in the Marine Band library where they have remained, virtually untouched, for lo these many years.

Opening lead—Q♥

By Oswald & James Jacoby

The opening notrump is a picture bid. It describes a hand with a definite point count. The standard is 16-18 but more important it describes a hand with a balanced pattern. To get best value from your notrumps the hand pattern should be 4-3-3-3; 4-4-3-2 or 5-3-3-2.

Since the notrump is a picture bid it is possible to develop very effective methods of responding to it. With a balanced hand you simply add your points to your partner's. The total determines whether you want to play a part score, game or slam.

The Stayman convention allows you to find 4-4 major suit fits. North's two club is an example of this convention. The bid does not show clubs. It merely asks partner to bid a four-card major suit if he has one.

South does have one and bids two spades. North raises right to the spade game and South proceeds to make his contract with an overtrick by drawing trumps; knocking out the ace of clubs and eventually losing the heart trick.

South would also make three notrump because the enemy hearts divide 4-4, but spades is the right spot.

West's height vs. East's speed

Expansion overshadows NBA all-star contest

SEATTLE (AP) — "I think the league has leveled off and this might be a proper time to expand," East Coach Tom Heinsohn said prior to tonight's 24th National Basketball Association All-Star game at the Seattle Center Coliseum.

While 24 of the league's finest players — 12 each from the Eastern and Western conferences — were preparing for the All-Star clash before a record Seattle crowd of 14,360 and a national television audience, expansion to an 18th team for the 1974-75 season loomed big on the NBA horizon.

The possible addition of another franchise for next season, expected to be the major topic of discussion at Tuesday's latebreaking Board of Governors meeting, probably was triggered by the expiration in Congress on Jan. 4 of the merger proposal between the NBA and the American Basketball Association.

Having failed in an effort to interlock with the younger ABA, the NBA apparently now has decided to expand. Where it will go still was a matter of conjecture, but several cities reportedly were in the running, including a late entry, San Diego.

San Diego previously failed as an NBA city, with its team moving to Houston at the outset of the 1971-72 season after four years in the league. And though it is now flopping as an ABA site, it appears to have reentered the picture with the reported presence of two groups from that city attending the all-star game.

San Diego likely will be open territory for next season because the ABA reportedly will move the existing Conquistadors to Los Angeles.

Other possible sites for the next NBA franchise included Toronto, where the Buffalo Braves are playing nine regular season games and one exhibition this season; New Orleans, home of the new Super Dome, and the Twin-Cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

While the Board of Governors busied itself with such matters as a possible successor to Commissioner Walter Kennedy, who has announced his retirement as of June 1, 1975, ways to help in the energy crisis and the 1974-75 schedule, interest centered on the All-Star game.

"Last year, it was a case of David (the East) against Goliath (the West)," said Heinsohn, "and it shapes up again that way this year."

His reference was to the West's superiority in height with 7-foot-2 Karem Abdul-Jabbar of Milwaukee, and a pair of 6-11 centers in Bob Lanier of Detroit and Nate Thurmond of Golden State. The East hoped to overcome the West's height advantage with speed and quickness.

The East starting lineup as selected by a national group of sports writers and broadcasters included 6-9 Dave Cowens at center, 6-5 John Havlicek of Boston and 6-5 Lou Hudson of Atlanta at forwards, and 6-5 Peter Maravich of Atlanta and 6-4 Walt Frazier of New York at guards.

Starting along with the towering Jabbar for the West were 6-7 forwards Rich Barry of Golden State and Chet Walker of Chicago, 6-4 guard Geoff Petrie of Portland and 6-1 guard Gait Goodrich of Los Angeles.

Champions welcome

NHL buys Seals

MONTREAL (AP) — The National Hockey League has removed a thorn from its side, but it cost $6.5 million and it still has a weak sister on its hands.

The league said Monday it has bought the California Golden Seals' franchise from Charles O. Finley, an owner not admired by other NHL owners or his players.

Clarence Campbell, NHL president, said Finley has signed an offer to sell the Seals.

"I don't want to knock him," said Campbell, "but there was one previous deal on which he reneged.

"So we didn't want to take any chances. We made him sign the document."

"I don't think a new owner here would make everybody skate faster, but I think it would boost morale and give us hope for the future," said Joey Johnston, a Golden Seals' player.

The league will operate the franchise until it can find an owner and more than likely will keep the club in Oakland, despite a lack of fan interest.

The reason: The original president of the Seals, Barry won Gerbig, wanted to move the franchise, but the NHL said no. Von Gerbig filed a multi-million-dollar lawsuit against the league charging restraint of trade.

Observers say if the NHL allowed a shift now Von Gerbig might win his case.

Fred Glover, coach and general manager of the Seals, had no comment on the sale. He is expected to lose one, or perhaps both, of his jobs when the club changes hands.

The seals are last in the West Division. Their record is 9-28-5 and they are averaging less than 5,000 fans a game, by far the worst mark in the league.

Campbell said the new owners should be "people with local orientation — someone who can respond to local opinion."

Stover Invitational

Tuscumbia moves into finals; Lincoln Cards upset Otterville

By BOB SHACKELFORD
Staff Sportswriter

STOVER — Close contests prevailed in the Stover Invitational Basketball Tournament Monday night as the action continued in the weather-lengthened affair.

The Lincoln Cardinals, with a 2-11 record, upset Otterville, in a consolation semifinal game, 71-70, while No. 2-seeded Tuscumbia edged past Cole Camp, 53-42, to move into the championship finals gainst Smithton.

Lincoln and Otterville played on equal terms with the Eagles leading by as little as one and as many as eight most of the way.

The game was decided in the final minute of play. With Otterville leading, 70-67, and :59 showing on the clock, Rod Ingram hit a 10-foot jumper to pull the Cardinals within one.

The Eagles went into a delay game, but a turnover gave the ball back to Lincoln with 42 seconds to go. In the next 30 seconds, both clubs had free throw opportunities. Lincoln's Tracey Meuschke missed a one-and-one chance, and Otterville's Lanny Landreth missed two charity tosses.

With :11 remaining, Ingram hit another jumper to put Lincoln ahead for the first time since the opening minute of the game, 71-70.

Otterville stiil had a crack at a win with two seconds left, when Jim Terrell of Lincoln, fouled Ed Thomas, but Thomas missed, and a despiration shot at the buzzer missed, giving the Cardinals their third win of the year.

Otterville left the tourney with a 6-6 season's mark.

Freshman Rick Rank, led the victors with 17 points, while Rusty Schilb took game scoring honors with 22 for Otterville.

Cole Camp gave Tuscumbia all they could handle before the Lions emerged with a toughly-contested win. Coach Mack Green's crew boosted their season's mark to 12-2.

Cole Camp, now 10-3, will take on Green Ridge for third-place honors.

Larry Sullivan inside, and deadly shots from Tom Wright outside kept the winners on top through the first two quarters, which saw Tuscumbia leading, 22-20, at the intermission.

Early in the third period, Cole Camp's Ken Weymuth hit on a drive to give the Bluebirds a short-lived 30-29 lead; however, Wright converted a three-point play, Sullivan scored on a base-line jumper, Pat McDonald hit from underneath and Monty Graves got two free throws to give Tuscumb the lead again, 38-30. Cole Camp's Chris Yeager hit from 15 feet to pull the Bluebirds to within six, 38-32, as the quarter closed.

The final quarter saw Tuscumbia show why it is considered one of the better Class-A clubs in central-Missouri. After Weymuth scored from 20 feet to close the gap to two, 42-40, Sullivan answered from underneath.

With 3:18 left, Tuscumbia went into their delay game. Forced to foul, Cole Camp lost any chance of victory when Bill Abbott, Sullivan, Graves and Wright converted their free tosses to move into a comfortable lead.

So effective was the delay that the Bluebirds were unable to score again until Harry Goosen scored with :14 showing.

Graves hit two more charity shots to close out the scoring.

Wright headed the Lions in the scoring department with 21, while Weymuth managed 13 for Cole Camp.

The tournament will conclude Saturday. In the 6:30 p.m. opener, Stover will meet Lincoln for the consolation trophy; at 8 p.m., Cole Camp and Green Ridge tangle for third place. Tuscumbia and Smithton clash for the championship at 9:30 p.m.

Shula treats Dolphins like men

Hair no measure of athletic ability

HOUSTON (AP) — Johnny Bench, Cincinnati's baseball superstar, showed up for the Super Bowl with a stunning brunette dangling on one arm and a luxurious growth just above his upper lip.

"I'll have to get rid of this before spring training," Bench said, stroking the mustache gently. "Sparky wouldn't like it."

The reference was to Sparky Anderson, genial but straight-laced manager of the Reds who is convinced that the cherished game of baseball has no greater enemy than the trend toward long hair, beards and mustaches.

Then Johnny went out and watched the Miami Dolphins, boasting some of the finest collections of hirsute adornments in all sports, completely devour the more conservative Minnesota Viking proteges of crew-cut Coach Bud Grant.

"Hair doesn't win football games," said the Dolphins' head coach, Don Shula. "I don't care how long the guys want to wear their hair or how many mustaches and beards they grow. I am interested in only one thing — performance."

What Shula wants, Shula gets. The Dolphins gave him one of the most methodically destructive performances the sport has ever seen. No Dolphin got his feet tangled in his hair. None choked on his mustache or tripped over a beard.

The hero of the game was Larry Csonka, the son of a one-time saloon bouncer from Stow, Ohio. He ran the ball 33 times for 145 yards — both Super Bowl records — and two touchdowns.

Csonka is a frightening figure just standing still. He is 6 feet, 2 inches tall and weighs 237 pounds. His muscles have muscles. Of Hungarian descent, he has dark beetle eyebrows, sideburns and a thick mustache.

The third Miami touchdown was scored by Larry's old sidekick of "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" fame, Jim Kiick, who has to brush his flowing hair back to see his face in the mirror and who sports a beard that makes the Smith brothers on the cough drop box look like pikers.

The Dolphins got six more points in their 24-7 victory over Minnesota-a field goal and three extra points contributed by a bandy-legged little Cypriot who wears no hair on top but lets it flower unrestrained down the side of his face, across his mouth and chin: Garo Yepremian.

Larry Little, the team's great offensive guard, sports a fine mustache. Bob Kuechenberg's blond hair and mustache makes him look like a Viking prince. Vern Den Herder and Manny Fernandez have fancy mustaches. Mercury Morris and Henry Stuckey stuff afros into their headgear.

If Marine Corps crew cuts and stern discipline on strictly personal appearance and habits produced champions, the Dolphins probably would be 12-30 for the last three years instead of 44-6-1.

The astute, capable Shula seems to have found a proper middle ground in dealing with his adult professionals. He's tough and demanding on the field, but he doesn't invade personal freedoms, even in the case of their sex lives.

"The thing about Coach Shula," says 11-year veteran Marv Fleming, who also played on Vince Lombardi's great Green Bay teams of the 1960s "is that he treats you like a man."

Venture to Forest Park, Three Rivers

Roadrunners on road for two

With Lewis Busch in the lineup for the first time this season, the State Fair Community College Roadrunners will try and even their record against Forest Park Community College in St. Louis Wednesday night.

The contest is the first of a two-night road trip for the Roadrunners, who are one game below .500 at 7-8 Thursday night, SFCC takes on Three Rivers Junior College of Poplar Bluff, Mo.

Busch was injured in preseason drills and had to undergo a back operation for a ruptured disc.

"He's not quite in shape, but he will certainly be an asset to us," said SFCC coach Bill Barton Monday afternoon.

Barton will be up against a young but big squad in Forest Park Wednesday. Warren Wynn, a product of St. Louis Northwest High School, stands 6-9. Don Stringfellow, a transfer student from St. Louis University, measurers in at 6-6. The other forward, Steve Cooks (St. Louis Normandy) is 6-3.

Vern Whitney and Tom Rothschild will be the starting guards for Coach Bob Nelson. Whitney is 6-3, Rothschild is 6-1.

Forest Park has won 10 of its 14 games this season, running Nelson's five-year-plus career mark there to 110-57. Last year Nelson's charges won all but eight of their 30 games.

Barton's biggest concern against Forest Park will be stopping their triple-post offense.

"I may use a 1-3-1 zone against them," he said.

With Busch back in the lineup, Charles Shell and Colles Webb will make up the front line. Either Jack Easley, Jerry Bybee or Billy Townes will round out the starting lineup at the guard spots.

Thursday night Barton can expect a man-to-man press from Gene Bess's Raiders.

"They'll probably pick us up when we get off the bus," Barton mused in his office prior to Monday's workout. "If they get behind, they may tighten up with a half-court press," he added.

Three Rivers isn't big, but the Raiders show good overall height. Dave Beckering and Mike Edwards, a pair of sophomores, are 6-6. Freshman Pope Hunt and sophomore Dennis Sims are both 6-4. Fred Rowe, another freshman who is expected to round out the Three Rivers' starting lineup, is 6-3.

Following the road trip, State Fair returns to the Agriculture Building on the Missouri State Fairgrounds to take on arch rival Penn Valley of Kansas City Saturday night.

New Mex. St. sub named Valley MVP

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Jim Bostic isn't a starter for New Mexico State's basketball team, but he must be about the best bench-warmer in the Missouri Valley Conference.

The 6-foot-8 junior forward and center came off the bench Saturday night to lead the Aggies to an 80-75 win over Tulsa and keep them tied for the Valley conference lead with three wins and no losses. For his sparkling effort he was named Missouri Valley Player of the Week.

Bostic scored 21 points and had 15 rebounds in the Aggies' sixth consecutive victory. He hit seven of 11 field goal attempts and seven of eight free throws.

It was the third game in a row he came from the bench to score in double figures, following his 17 points against Wichita State and 12 against St. Louis.

In winning the Valley honor, Bostic nudged out six other players who had good weeks.

Warrensburg captures Knob Noster tourney

(Democrat-Capital Service)

KNOB NOSTER — Warrensburg edged Higginsville, 57-54, here Monday night for the Knob Noster Invitational Basketball Tournament championship. Trailing most of the way, the Tigers came up with a 21-point fourth quarter to claim the trophy.

Higginsville led at the half, 33-26, and at the end of the third quarter, 41-36.

Knob Noster downed Concordia, 60-52, for third place, while Santa Fe defeated St. Paul's of Concordia, 59-55, for consolation.

The tournament was scheduled to wind up last week, however, the weather forced postponement of the finals until Monday.

Gremlins could play spoiler role

Sacred Heart hosts Cole Camp

Sedalia Sacred Heart can play the spoiler role tonight when the Gremlins take on Cole Camp in Kaysinger Conference play at home.

Cole Camp, 2-0 in Kaysinger play, is deadlocked with LaMonte and Smithton for the league's top spot. The Bluebirds sport one of the top marks in the area with a 10-3 record.

Last night, Cole Camp lost to another Class-A central-Missouri power in Tuscumbia in the semifinals of the Stover Invitational Tournament.

One other league game is on tonight's schedule in Lincoln, where the Cardinals play host to Northwest. It could be the most important game of the season for both teams, since each is seeking its first conference win. Lincoln is 0-4 in Kaysinger play and has won only two of 11 games to date. However, one of those wins was over Northwest in the Kaysinger Conference Tournament, 50-46.

Northwest is winless in 11 games and stands 0-3 in conference play.

Elsewhere in the league Tuesday, Stover visits Eugene, Warsaw travels to Clinton, Smithton hosts Leeton and LaMonte is at home with Sweet Springs. All are non-conference affairs.

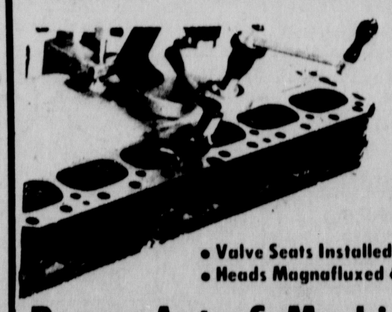

Cole Camp has two of the league's top scorers in Ken Weymuth and Harry Goosen, while Sacred Heart's scoring has been balanced through the Grems' first 10 games, with Tony Lock, Jim McMullin, Rick Weller, Randy Johnson and Mark Register all averaging in or near double figures.

Sacred Heart, which has won the past two Kaysinger cage championships, would be virtually eliminated from the championship picture this year with another loss. The Gremlins have already lost to Warsaw and Green Ridge, and are still looking for their first league win of the season. Overall, Sacred Heart stands at 3-7.

Other games on tap this week featuring Kaysinger Conference teams find LaMonte at Cole Camp, Smithton at Warsaw, Sweet Springs at Green Ridge, Lincoln at Mack's Creek and St. John's (Kansas City) at Sacred Heart. All are Friday night.

In addition, the balance of the Stover Invitational Tournament is scheduled to be completed Saturday night.

UCLA, Irish hold on to 1-2 rankings

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UCLA and Notre Dame, rolling on a collision course toward the next two weekends, continued to hold down the 1-2 spots in The Associated Press college basketball ratings today.

The mighty Uclans stretched their all-time record winning streak to 87 games — 12-0 this season — with victories over Washington State, California and Stanford last week. They received all 46 first-place votes and a perfect 920 points from the nationwide board of sports writers and broadcasters who participated in this week's poll.

Notre Dame, which hosts UCLA on Saturday and meets the Bruins in Los Angeles the following week, is 8-0 after walloping Xavier of Ohio 87-44 in its only action last week.

The Fighting Irish, seeking to match their football counterparts with a No. 1 ranking, received 816 points.

North Carolina State's 80-74 triumph over Maryland on Sunday brought about a switch in positions from last week's poll. This time, N.C. State is third with 700 points and Maryland fourth with 598.

North Carolina retained its No. 5 ranking while Marquette climbed from seventh to sixth by defeating San Diego State and DePaul.

Vanderbilt, which had been sixth, slipped to eighth by losing to Louisiana State. Providence climbed past the Commodores from 10th to seventh with victories over Villanova and Cal-Irvine.

Long Beach State shrugged off a harsh National Collegiate Athletic Association probation and turned back Pacific and San Jose State to hold onto ninth place while Alabama jumped from 12th to 10th by routing Tennessee and Mississippi State.

Previously unbeaten New Mexico dropped out of the Top Ten. The Lobos lost to Arizona and Arizona State and fell from eighth to 15th.

The Second Ten consists of South Carolina, Indiana, Southern California, Michigan, New Mexico, Louisville, Pittsburgh, Missouri, Wisconsin and Cincinnati.

Last week, it was Louisville, Alabama, Indiana and Wisconsin tied for 13th, South Carolina, Nevada-Las Vegas, Southern Cal, Michigan, Memphis State and Hawaii.

Miss. State cashes in on suspensions

Mississippi State trims 'thin' Louisiana State squad, 89-75

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Talk about handicaps, Louisiana State's basketball team had a lulu Monday night — no players. Well, not enough, anyway.

Because of suspensions, only five players dressed for the game with Mississippi State, and only four were left after Colis Temple fouled out at the end.

The result, quite naturally: Mississippi State 89, LSU 75.

Coach Dale Brown was responsible for shaving his squad to the bone. He put seven of the 12 varsity players on suspension for breaking curfew the night before.

"I was scared to death going up against LSU that way," said Mississippi State Coach Kermit Davis. "As far as I was concerned, it was the worst thing that could have happened.

"I knew those five players were capable, and I didn't know whether our players would rise to the occasion, or think they could take it easy."

Brown's action was understandable and admirable, Davis added.

"I have a lot of respect for what Brown did, but I don't think he did what any other coach wouldn't have done," said Davis.

Elsewhere in college basketball Monday night, eighth-ranked Vanderbilt overpowered Georgia 91-71; No. 10 Alabama smothered Mississippi 88-71 and No. 12 Indiana trimmed Northwestern 72-67.

Given an edge, Mississippi State took advantage of it behind Jerry Jenkins' 23 points. The Bulldogs really made hay in the second half, when the decimated Tigers became tired, and outscored their opponents 51-39.

Temple, LSU's high scorer with 23 points, fouled out with 53 seconds left in the game — leaving four mates to face Mississippi State's five.

Brown explained his action for the one-game suspension.

"These young men violated the curfew," he said. "I have talked to each of them and they have admitted their indiscretions. Nobody is mad at anybody and I am sure they have learned their lessons."

LSU plays powerful Alabama this Saturday and Brown says: "As things stand now, all will be back in uniform."

Jan van Breda Kolff and Jess Fosnes combined for 32 points and 24 rebounds, helping Vanderbilt beat Georgia in their Southeastern Conference game. Each player scored 16 points and Fosnes grabbed 13 rebounds and van Breda Kolff 11 as the Commodores won their 11th game in 12 starts.

Charles Cleveland scored 27 points, mostly on long jump shots, to lead Alabama over Mississippi. Down 20-11, the Crimson Tide came back behind Cleveland to grab a 36-29 lead at the half.

John Laskowski hit an 18-foot shot and a pair of free throws in the waning minutes to lead Indiana past tenacious Northwestern.

In other college action, Furman beat Manhattan 94-76; Dayton trimmed Chicago of Loyola 74-59; Kansas State clipped Oklahoma State 72-69; Oklahoma crushed Colorado 92-61; Eastern Kentucky beat Austin Peay 71-64; Penn State downed Princeton 62-50; American University nipped Temple 65-64; Tennessee turned back Kentucky 67-54 and Florida bounced Auburn 92-81.

WHA, NHL near 'peace' settlement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The National Hockey League is considering proposals from the World Hockey Association that would settle litigation and end the salary war for players between the leagues, the Los Angeles Times has reported.

NHL President Clarence Campbell said Monday that the NHL board of governors will make a decision this week on the "peace offer," the Times reported.

The offer, tendered at a meeting in Washington, D.C. last week end, does not constitute a merger, the Times said Tuesday. It comes as the leagues near a court-imposed deadline this Friday to settle their legal differences or face trial in Philadelphia March 18 in their litigation.

Under the agreement the WHA would drop its $50 million suit against the NHL over the validity of the reserve clause and agree not to challenge the NHL's new player contract with the one-year option clause.

The NHL would pay the WHA close to $2 million to cover the WHA's legal fees to date.

Teams of the rival leagues would play each other in a minimum of 15 exhibition games.

All teams would drop legal action against the other league.

The NHL would stop trying to prevent WHA teams from using rinks in NHL cities.

"We have 10 points of agreement, but a whole lot of disagreement on other points — but I'm very optimistic," said Don Reagen, general counsel and secretary of the WHA.

Alan Eagleson, executive director of the NHL Players Assn., said his group would fight the agreement because "This is another step toward a merger."

Borrows nets 31 for University High

Jeff Barrows poured in 31 points to lead the Warrensburg University High eighth grade past the Sedalia Junior High School's eighth-grade squad Monday night, 41-35.

U-High led at the half, 19-17.

David Albright and Roy Webb paced the losers with 13 and 10 respectively.

Four sophomore Tigers lead way

WARRENSBURG — Four Smith-Cotton players hit in double figures as the Tigers' sophomores upended Warrensburg, 78-53, Monday.

Bill Rabourn pumped in 18, while teammates Doug Slagel (15), Pete Cline (12) and Bob Paul (10) followed to give S-C its second win in four outings.

Chris Short was the leading scorer for Warrensburg with 15.

The next action for the Tiger sophomores comes Monday in the Jefferson City Sophomore Tournament.

Kruger guides Wildcats; Sooners riddle Colorado

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kansas State senior guard Lon Kruger scored 18 points in the second half to fire the Wildcats to a 72-69 victory over Oklahoma State Monday night.

In the only other Big Eight action of the evening, Oklahoma crushed Colorado 91-66 despite the loss of star center Alvan Adams for most of the game because of foul trouble.

Kansas State is now 9-5 overall and 1-1 in the conference. The Wildcats never trailed and led by as many as 14 points in both the first and second half. K-State led 38-28 at halftime.

The Cowboys pulled to within three with a little under nine minutes left. Kruger, who led all scorers with 29 points, hit two free throws with 14 seconds left to ice the victory.

Oklahoma State is 0-2 in league play, 6-8 over-all.

At Norman, Adams played only nine minutes in the first half after he picked up three personals, but the Sooners roared to a 44-33 halftime advantage anyway.

Adams, averaging more than 20 points a game, was hit with his fourth personal early in the second half and went to the bench again. He went back in late in the second half and fouled out. He picked up nine points and three rebounds for the night.

The Sooners are 2-0 in the Big Eight and 11-3 over-all. Colorado is 1-1 and 6-8.

McKinzie lifts Gremlins late

William McKinzie scored in the final seconds of play and lifted the Sacred Heart junior high school basketball team past Stover, 42-40, Monday night.

McKinzie stole the ball with four seconds showing and put it in for the Gremlins fifth Kaysinger Conference junior high win against no losses this season.

Gary Weller topped all scorers with 18 points for Sacred Heart. Loren Burke had 15 for Stover.

In the girls volleyball game, Stover claimed the victory, 15-12, 16-14.

Jan. 24, Sacred Heart hosts LaMonte in junior high action.

James Silas hot from floor for the Spurs

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — James Silas has a secret.

However, if he continues the pace he had as his San Antonio Spurs whipped the Utah Stars Monday night, he won't keep the secret very long.

Silas, a 6-foot-3 guard who shot mostly at close range, paced the San Antonio scorers with 11 for 14 from the field and 23 points in the Spurs' 90-81 American Basketball Association victory. It was the only action in either the ABA or NBA Monday night.

Utah, which has dropped two of its last three, was held to its lowest point total all year by San Antonio, the ABA's best defensive club.

The Stars, who lead the ABA West by 3½ games, have won 17 of their last 22 contests.

Gathers 487 votes

Ms. King named female athlete

NEW YORK (AP) — Billie Jean King, who beat Bobby Riggs in her continuing crusade to upgrade the image of women in sports, was named Female Athlete of the Year by The Associated Press Tuesday.

Ms. King, as she prefers to be addressed, was the overwhelming choice in the voting of AP member sports writers and broadcasters. She received 487 votes, compared with 146 for Olga Korbut, the Russian gymnast who received the honor last year for her Olympic performance.

Kathy Whitworth, who was Athlete of the Year in 1965 and 1966, was a distant third with 34 votes, followed by Margaret Court of Australia, winner of the French, Australian and United States open tennis championships, with 20; swimmer Keena Rothhammer, 11; track star Mary Decker, 9, and tennis pro Chris Evert, 7.

The award is accompanied by the Babe Didrikson Zaharias Trophy, presented annually by George Zaharias in memory of his wife, the late golfing great who was AP Athlete of the Year six times.

Billie Jean, who also was named AP Athlete of the Year in 1967, was overshadowed by Mrs. Court on the pro tennis tournament trail. The only major international title to come her way was Wimbledon, which she won for the fifth time in her career. But her straight-set triumph over the 55-year-old Riggs in one of the most highly touted hustles of all time left little doubt of her ability to play under pressure.

"Winning Wimbledon was the most rewarding for me personally," said Ms. King, the top-ranked woman player in the United States, "but beating Riggs did more for the cause of getting recognition for women.

"From a professional standpoint, I had one of the worst years ever. I only won eight or nine tournaments compared with 19 or 20 in 1972.

"The AP Athlete of the Year is strictly a popularity contest. I should have won it in 1971, the year Evonne Goolagong won it. I played the best tennis of my career that year."

A virus and heat prostration eliminated her early from the U.S. Open singles. It was a bitter pill for her to swallow and her biggest disappointment of the year. On the Virginia Slims circuit, she won only three of 12 events she entered for a total of $50,800 in prize money.

Mrs. Court, meanwhile, won 14 of 18 pro tournaments in the U.S. in addition to three of the Big Four international championships before she retired last month to await the birth of her second child.

But her image was tarnished on Mothers Day when Bobby Riggs beat her in straight sets in the first "battle of the sexes." Ms. King says it was that setback for the cause of women that forced her to take up a challenge from Riggs in what turned out to be one of the most lucrative single payday in sports history — $100,000 guaranteed for each and another $100,000 for the winner.

BAM schedules more plays than Broadway

By WILLIAM GLOVER
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — For the second half of this theatrical season, Broadway reluctantly takes a back seat to Lafayette Street, Brooklyn.

That slightly run-down boulevard a half-hour subway ride from dimming Times Square is the home of the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Since a recent management juice-up the place likes to be known as BAM, an apt acronym.

To cap the new activism, three eminent British acting companies are being imported for a four-month BAM display. Between now and June there are to be 11 play premieres. In contrast, Broadway lists 10 arrivals.

"It all came about accidentally," an Academy spokesman says, dispelling the suggestion of a plot to surpass Broadway. "Getting the trio in succession happened as a kind of mutual feed-off among them."

The main troupe in the half-million dollar venture is the Royal Shakespeare Company, which bowed a few nights ago with "Richard II," the first of four exhibits. It will be followed by The Actors Company, a band of Cambridge-based thespic rebels, and then by the Young Vic which is a branch of the National Company of Great Britain.

A triumphant visit of the Royal Shakespeare three years ago with Peter Brook's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" got BAM Executive Director Harvey Lichtenstein dreaming of a return engagement. Working out timetables took a lot of juggling and, in the meantime, BAM scouts reported other transatlantic prospects.

Frank Dunlop, head of the Young Vic, happened to be an old friend of Lichtenstein. The Acting Company was spotted at the Edinburgh Festival. By coincidence, one of its founders, Edward Petherbridge, turned out to be a dropout from the elaborate National organization.

Along the way, too, the newly organized School of Performing Arts at Brooklyn College and an airline (Caledonian) became interested in a collaborative operation.

"A large part of the financing has to come from boxoffice receipts," says Promotion Director Charles Ziff. "So far subscriptions, particularly for weekends, have been doing fine."

Just how much revenue will be drained away from Broadway is anyone's guess. The Academy's three auditoriums where the plays will be distributed have about 4,000 seats.

After "Richard II," in which Ian Richardson and Richard Pascoe alternate in the two key roles, the BAM Royal Shakespeare schedule includes "Sylvia Plath," a show based upon the works of a women's lib heroine; "The Hollow Crown"; and "Pleasure and Repentance," an anthology in April starring Sir Michael Redgrave.

The Actors Company arrives at the end of January with four items. Chekhov's little-done "The Wood Demon," Congreve's "The Way of the World," Shakespeare's "King Lear" and "Knots," a free-form romp based upon a novel by R. B. Laing. The Young Vic comes by in March with "The Taming of the Shrew," Terence Rattigan's 1920 opus "French Without Tears," and "Scapino," which is Moliere's play in an Italian setting.

Back on Broadway, producers have lined up this assortment of premiere dates: Jan. 20, "Lorelei," Carol Channing's renovated version of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," at the Palace; Feb. 14, "What the Wine Sellers Buy," at the Beaumont; Feb. 28, "In Two Keys," a brace of Noel Coward caprices starring Anne Baxter, Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy, at the Barrymore.

On March 5, Zero Mostel reprises "Ulysses in Nighttown," excerpted from James Joyce, at the Winter Garden; March 6 brings "Over Here!" a musical about the 1940s with Patty and Maxene Andrews, at the Shubert; March 14, Murray Schisgal's new comedy "An American Millionaire" is due at the Levine with Paul Sorvino.

Sometime in mid-March, Herb Gardner's latest caper, "Thieves," is scheduled, perhaps with Tony Perkins and Lily Tomlin. Joseph Papp must debut his fourth subscription offering of the season on March 21 at the Beaumont but hasn't announced yet what it will be.

After that, on March 26, Henry Fonda is booked at the Morosco for a one-man workout in "Clarence Darrow," based by David W. Rentels on the life of the famous criminal lawyer.

As planning now stands, Broadway won't receive another event until June 13, "All the Comforts of Home," at the Levine. Robert Preston and Colleen Dewhurst are pencilled for leads in the musical to be based on Thomas Wolfe's "Look Homeward, Angel."

Republicans claim Democrats received more in dairy funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican National Committee claims that Democrats received more campaign money than Republicans from dairy interests in 1972.

The Republicans published an analysis in its official magazine "First Monday" in which they said Democratic candidates received $613,400 from four milk industry groups. The analysis said Republicans, including President Nixon, received $577,000.

Nixon has denied in a white paper that contributions pledged from milk interests influenced his 1971 decision to raise milk price supports. That denial was repeated Monday by Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren.

Warren also refused to say why a staff member violated Nixon's rule not to be told about campaign contributions. The issue arose when Warren was asked why presidential aide Charles W. Colson sent a memorandum to Nixon in 1970 telling him of a pledge to contribute $2 million for the 1972 campaign.

Warren replied only that "occasionally people break rules."

The pledge was made by Associated Milk Producers Inc. and was divulged to Nixon despite his rule against receiving "any information from anybody with regard to campaign contributions."

The GOP national committee said its analysis of dairy industry campaign contributions came from the magazine Congressional Quarterly.

The Republican article listed donations from Associated Milk Producers at $397,000 to all Republican candidates and Nixon, and $334,400 to all Democrats.

It also said that contributions came from political organizations for the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives — $4,500 to Republicans and $1,000 to Democrats; Dairymen Inc., — $91,000 to Republicans and $141,000 to Democrats; Mid-American Dairymen Inc., — $84,500 to Republicans and $137,000 to Democrats.

In a related development, an organization called Project on Corporate Responsibility Inc., owner of two shares of Gulf Oil Corp. stock, demanded that Gulf's board of directors recover damages from corporate officers fined as a result of illegal campaign contributions in the 1972 campaign. Gulf pleaded guilty to making illegal corporate contributions to the presidential campaigns of Nixon, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark.

The organization said Gulf received $5,000 in fines, sustained various legal fees and other expenses and "the loss of good will ... by reason of its conviction which may reach many millions of dollars."

Gulf had no immediate comment on the demand.

The Project on Corporate Responsibility was formed with a stated intent of trying to make corporations more responsive to their stockholders and the public.

New auto stockpiles increased

DETROIT (AP) — Automakers say their dealers have a 70-day stockpile of new cars, compared with a 46-day supply on hand at this time last year.

Despite cutbacks in production and a week-long holiday at Christmas, the automakers said they had 1.6 million cars at dealerships or on the way as of Dec. 31.

Comparable inventories often are seen in the early spring, when the market for cars opens up as the weather warms. But high inventories early in the year could mean production slowdowns in the coming months, according to Ward's Automotive Reports, an industry journal.

Ward's said about two million cars are likely to be cut from the lines before March, slashing production by 26 per cent from 1973's first quarter.

The Dec. 31, 1972, total of cars on hand was just over 1.3 million.

The 70-day figure is based on the December sales rate, which was 13 per cent below sales for the previous 30 days.

Chrysler has the biggest inventory, with an 88-day supply on hand, while General Motors and Ford could sell cars for 68 and 67 days at the December rate without making any new ones.

American Motors has only a 14-day supply, largely due to the heavy demand on its compact Gremlin and Hornet models.

Farm roundup

Complaints of fertilizer shortage are increasing

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says it is receiving a growing number of complaints about fertilizer shortages and that the crunch appears to be hitting nearly all areas of the country.

A weekly report Tuesday by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service said all state and county offices continue to tally shortages of nitrogen, phosphate, potash and mixed fertilizer.

Letters from farmers and dealers complaining of shortages also are increasing in volume, the report said.

Fears that the fertilizer shortage may worsen also are being expressed by industry and other USDA agencies. The Fertilizer Institute, a trade organization, says factories have stepped up production but demand has outpaced it.

Thus, the institute says, inventories were practically exhausted last summer when normally there should be a carryover of fertilizer chemicals.

Meantime, farmers are being encouraged by the government to go all out for crop production in 1974.

Another report published Tuesday by the department's Economic Research Service notes that fertilizer prices have soared and that those increases also will be major factors this year.

"If these prices are an indication of 1974 levels, the farm bill for fertilizers may run in the neighborhood of $4 billion, compared with $2.5 billion in 1972," the most recent year tabulated, the report said.

Farmers might respond by cutting back on fertilizer usage, even if the supply situation improves, the report speculated. But it added:

"It's entirely possible that output of most fertilizers will be curtailed by the short supply of energy, which is essential to production of all fertilizers including the sulfur needed to make phosphate materials."

The report, published in the January issue "Farm Index," said transportation could be another snag.

About 70 per cent of farm fertilizer is applied in the spring. Thus, the report said, moving such huge quantities in such a brief period—assuming the supply is there—will put an even greater strain on the transportation system.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department is urging farmers and sales handlers to setp up the use of markings on sows and boars so that animals infected with brucellosis can be traced back to herds of origin.

The identification is part of a campaign to eliminate the disease nationally. Federal inspectors will be taking an estimated one million blood samples from sows and boars at slaughter plants in the next six months, officials said Tuesday.

Markings are easily applied by the use of coded "slap tattoos" on live animals at the time of sale, the department said.

Saxbe's authority may get test soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disputes between the FBI and the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration may soon test Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe's authority within the Justice Department.

One conflict between the two agencies, both under Justice, involves proposed federal control of crime records sent to state and local governments.

The argument involves how far the federal government should go in policing those who control state and local crime computers and in punishing those who violate federal policy, LEAA Administrator Donald E. Santarelli said.

The FBI maintains the computerized crime files and the LEAA finances many state and local computer projects dealing with criminal records.

Santarelli said the two agencies disagree over the use of information contained in a criminal history that is returned by the FBI to state and local governments.

Saxbe has said he favors stronger legislation and regulations to protect individual privacy and the confidentiality of criminal history files. He has endorsed the move to prevent those files from falling into the hands of such unauthorized persons as potential employers or credit investigators.

Santarelli said some groups want the federal government to prohibit all distribution except for law enforcement purposes, but he insisted that state legislatures should have the authority to decide this.

The issue is likely to come to a head soon, because the department has been threatened with a lawsuit by a group of congressmen and others who claim the lack of controls constitutes an unconstitutional invasion of privacy.

The other area of dispute between the two agencies concerns the LEAA proposal to take the job of gathering crime statistics away from the FBI and other agencies now involved in it and put it in the hands of a new and independent Bureau of Criminal Statistics.

Santarelli said he has recommended to Saxbe the creation of such a national statistics-gathering bureau.

There's a lot more to it than gas economy.

With everybody talking about (and working for) gas economy, along comes Capri, the sexy European. It not only has European styling to brag about, but European ideas on gas economy are built right into it. Still, these aren't the only reasons why Capri sold more cars in its first three years in America than any other import in history. Shown above are 16 other great reasons for making your next car Lincoln-Mercury's Capri. Everything you see is standard on the Capri—everything.

Production shutdown

Ford auto chassises sit unfinished on an assembly line at Mahwah, N.J., after the Ford Motor Co. closed the facility for one week Monday, idling 3,400 workers. The move was designed to cut back production on Ford's slow-selling big cars. Unlike two earlier shutdowns announced last week by Ford — at Wixom, Mich., and St. Louis — the Mahwah plant will resume production next Monday with the same work force. (UPI)

Ann Landers

'Gutted' old lady has passion surge

Dear Ann Landers: I have read with amusement the letters in your column from women who seem to be in perpetual search for sexual ecstasy. Take it from an old lady who is past 60 — it's all in the head.

Recently I was involved in a minor accident. While the insurance adjuster, a handsome young man in his 30s, was writing out the claim, I felt a sudden surge of passion. (I had a hysterectomy 10 years ago!) Had I been 30 years younger I'm sure I'd have made a pass at the young man. So you see, Ann, where sex is concerned, there's a very thin line between reality and fantasy. — Gutted But Not Dead

Dear Not Dead: There's a great deal of fantasy connected with sexual desire, in fact, lust is loaded with it! This doesn't mean you were imagining those feelings. A woman in her 60s can be far from sexually dead — "gutted" or not — and your experience proved it!

Dear Ann Landers: Why do people have such dirty minds? I refer to that mealy-mouthed gossip who noticed that a certain girl in the office always wears the same outfit on Thursday that she wore on Wednesday. The cat observed: "Her dress is usually pretty wrinkled — and her hair is a mess." She concluded that the girl has a steady arrangement and doesn't sleep home on Wednesday night.

That letter made me furious because last Wednesday night I went directly from work to a friend's house following a frantic phone call. Her husband is overseas and her labor pains had started. The poor kid has no relatives in town and I am her only close friend. When I arrived, the taxi had already been called to take her to the hospital. She was waiting for me with instructions on what to do for the two pre-schoolers.

Her two-year-old had a terrible cold. I slept on the couch and held that child in my arms all night. The following morning the woman next door took the kids and I went to work looking like I had lost a rassling match with two gorrillas.

Sorry I couldn't have turned up looking fresh as a daisy in order to protect my reputation, but these are the facts, Ma'm. — Nuts To The Gossips

Dear N.T.G.: Let's hear it for a Good Samaritan with wrinkled clothes and messed-up hair. Thanks for writing!

Dear Ann Landers: You advised mothers to teach their daughters to sew, cook, fix hems and make beds. You then went on to suggest that fathers teach their sons to be "fixers" of whatever might break in the house.

Where have you been these last 10 years, Annie? Don't you know that His and Her duties are things of the past? Men should know how to sew and cook and make beds and women should be able to fix faucets, repair appliances, change tires and repair whatever breaks.

Assigning certain jobs to certain sexes is unfair, unpleasant and impractical. We share the work at our house. But how much easier it would be for both of us if, when we attended school, Home Ec and Woodshop had been compulsory subjects for everyone. — Over 30

Dear Over: Right you are. Odd jobs know no gender. These past several years have seen a blurring of the sexes. Today, precious few things are exclusively His and Hers. In fact, we have trouble labeling He and She. Thanks for writing.

EEG measures waves of brain

DEAR DR. LAMB — The nervous system is very interesting to me. Electroencephalography (EEG) especially interests me since I have just had such a test.

Is the EEG accurate in most cases, and would you give me a little information about it. Could you describe how to detect certain abnormalities?

DEAR READER — Whole books are written on this subject, so I can only scratch the surface. The brain cells send out electrical impulses regularly. The effect is similar to the constant pulsing of a fluorescent lamp. These constant electrical pulses can be measured and plotted against time on a strip of paper. That is what the EEG graph is, a record of the changing electrical pulses traced out along a graph or time base.

The impulses are measured by the electrodes attached to the scalp. In clinical tracings of this type only the surface electrical activity of the brain or the cortex area is really measured. The deeper electrical activity doesn't reach the surface.

The electrical pulses of the cortex brain cells have been classified according to how fast they are (frequency), how large they are (amplitude) and how regular or rhythmic they are. Lack of oxygen to the brain will cause large slow waves. An abnormal area of electrical activity in the brain may cause sharp spike waves. Sleep produces changes in the waves and so does dreaming and rapid eye movements (REM).

The large number of electrodes are used to find the area of the brain that is involved in producing the electrical pulses. A good example here would be the person who has a spot in the brain that fires off large electrical pulses or spike waves. Such a spot of overactive brain cells can cause a convulsion. The excessive electrical pulse behaves like lightening striking and abnormally stimulates a lot of other brain cells that control the arm, hand, face, leg and body movements. The rapid irregular stimulation of these cells results in the convulsion.

Using several electrodes and looking at the electrical pattern, it is often possible to locate where the spot is that is causing the problem.

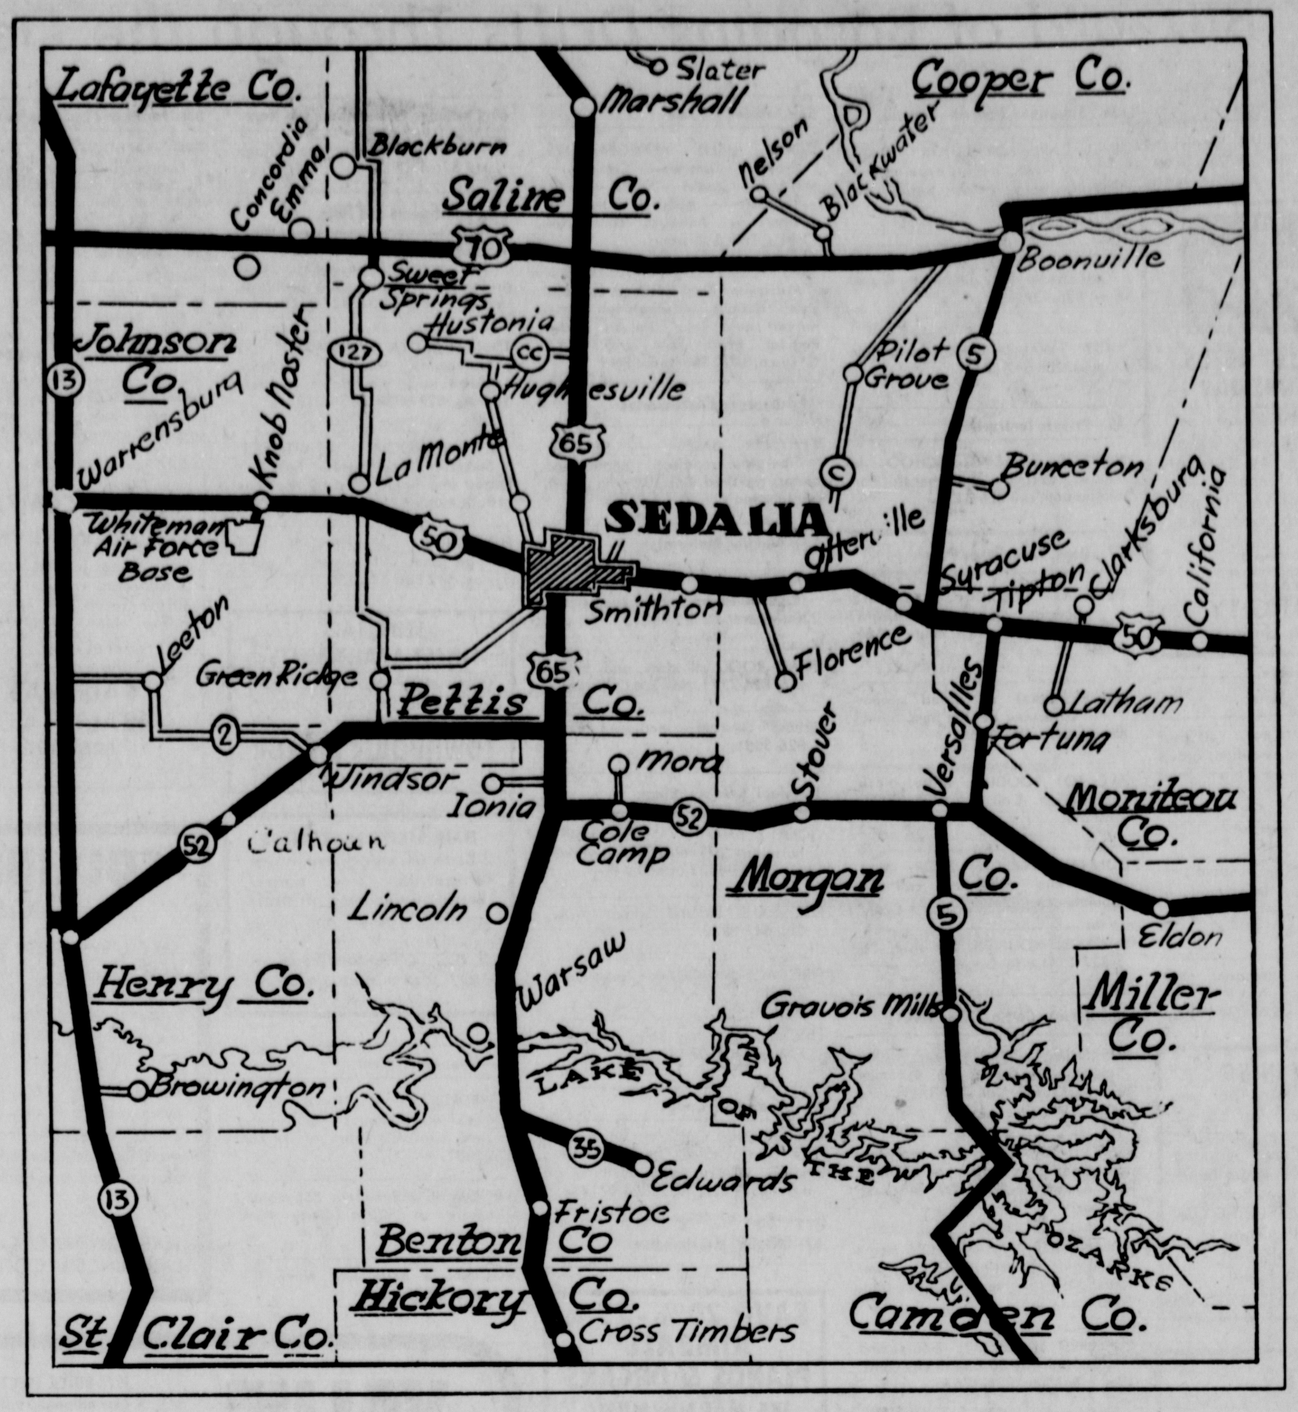

Using similar techniques, a brain tumor can often be identified and its location determined.

Interpreting the EEG is a difficult task. In the hands of a well-trained, experienced neurologist they can be immensely useful. EEG's won't always show everything because only part of the brain is measured this way. But it is one of our best diagnostic tools in selected cases.

How accurate it is depends on what it is used for. By using other procedures to stimulate the brain its usefulness can be expanded. To a very large extent its accuracy and usefulness depends on how well the record is taken and the skill of the person who interprets the record. A good record is not useful in complex problems unless the person who interprets it is highly skilled in its use. (NEA)
